CIRCLING the CIRCLE

—What's become of the proposition to give Circleville some boulevard lights?

—Don't fail to send your free want ad in for Wednesday's paper. Publication that day won't cost you a cent.

—If we hear anyone kick about the weather Circleville is having now we're going to murder them in cold blood and throw ourselves on the good hearts of a jury.

—A Russian newspaper says farmers lynch dandies as horse thieves in the United States. And we hear that over in Russia they lynch horse thieves as dandies.

—The movie operators in Chicago went on strike and theaters were closed. Maybe Mayor Thompson was just a bit indiscreet in defying King George like that.

—Memories of almost a century and a quarter of California history were sealed at Pomona, Cal., when Dona Pera Mora, who was 122 years old, died. Two surviving brothers are each more than a century old.

—Quite a crowd was in attendance at the opening of Circleville's first murder trial on Monday. This is the first murder case that has been heard in Pickaway County Common Pleas Court since around 1911, according to the clerk of courts.

—A Parisian proposes to take five days out of the calendar and give them names, leaving 12 months of 30 days each. Fine, if he can think up a rhyme so we can remember when the five days come.

—How do you like The Circleville Herald now? We're gradually making improvements and we'd like to know what you think of them. Do you read the daily market reports for grain, produce, hogs and cattle? They come into The Herald office over telegraph wires each day and are right up to snuff.

—Tomorrow, Wednesday, The Circleville Herald will publish classified advertisements free of charge. Don't fail to send one in; give them a trial, as it doesn't cost you a cent. You may have something to sell, barter or give away. You may want to buy something. Perhaps you want a job. Whatever it is, let a Herald want ad work for you tomorrow for nothing.

—One magic trick we used to like to help out the magician in the good old days we never see performed any more. That was the one where the magician came into the audience and poured different kinds of liquors out of the same bottle and allowed us a taste. Ah, me! Them good old days. What mattered if he did crack the bottle afterward and take out a guinea pig.

—Because jurors in the case of Dan Downer, at Yakima, Wash., drank all of the two quarts of bonded liquor passed into the jury room as evidence Downer did not have a fair trial, in the opinion of Judge Mitchell Gilliam, Downer was granted a new trial.

Had the liquor been evenly divided possibly no talisman would have been incapacitated before deciding the case, the judge held in his decision.

NEW VENIRE CALLED IN MURDER TRIAL

CLUES LACKING IN SEARCH FOR BANK ROBBERS

Bandits Who Looted Washington C. H. Institution May Be In Canada.

WASHINGTON, C. H., Feb. 7.—(INS)—Attaches of the Peoples' and Drovers' Bank, here, were checking their records today to determine the amount stolen from that institution by five armed bandits yesterday. Officials of the bank reported this morning that their estimate of approximately $200,000 in cash and negotiable bonds would doubtless be found correct. About $25,000 of this sum was in currency.

County authorities and bank detectives who were called in immediately after the robbery, reported today they had uncovered no clues.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 7.—(INS)—That the five men who early yesterday robbed the Peoples' and Drovers' bank of Washington C. H., of $200,000 in cash and negotiable bonds, escaped toward Canada, seemed probable here today, when a report was received by Columbus police, from Marion.

A filling station attendant at Marion reported that group of men drove to his station yesterday and after purchasing gasoline tendered a hundred dollar bill in payment. They drove north, he said.

LOCAL BEEKEEPERS HEAR EXPERT TALK

Pickaway Association Elects New Officer at Meeting in Farm Bureau Office.

J. H. Pobst, of Ashville, was elected purchasing agent for the association and it was recommended that all orders for bee supplies should be handled by him.

Mr. Orr, of Ross county, was elected secretary and treasurer of the association, to succeed Curtis Fisher, who resigned.

Other officers of the association are: Carl Hurst, of Williamsport, president and W. B. Cady, of Circleville, vice president.

A field day for the association is being planned some time in May or June.

AUTOS DAMAGED IN STREET COLLISION

Monday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock Mrs. Robert Colville, drove her Dodge sedan into the back of Frank Bennett's Cadillac which was double parked on West Main street, near the water trough. Harry Topolosky, Bennett's chauffeur was at the wheel at the time.

The impact hurled Betty Colville into the windshield, but she was not cut. George Colville was in the back seat of the Dodge.

The back and the fender of the Cadillac were damaged, as well as the lights and bumper on the Dodge, the wind shield of which was also broken.

New Rat Killing Method Will Be Shown In County

In the midst of pest hunts conducted throughout different sections of the county in which the rat mortalities were numbered in the thousands, here comes a special rat gassing campaign.

M. P. Jones, Entomology Department, Ohio State university, will assist H. S. Lewis, county agent, in conducting rat killing demonstrations in the county on Feb. 13 and 14.

These demonstrations are designed to acquaint farmers with the value of Cyanagos and methods of using it in exterminating rats.

The annual rat toll exacted from Pickaway county farmers runs into thousands of dollars.

HOOVER URGED TO ENTER OHIO PRIMARY RACE

Buckeye Supporters of Secretary of Commerce Seek to Oppose Willis.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 7.—(INS)—Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover today had under consideration a resolution, signed by more than three score Ohio Republicans, including well known G. O. P. leaders of the Buckeye state urging him to declare himself a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination and to enter the campaign which precedes the Ohio presidential preference primaries to be held on April 25.

The resolution, which was introduced and signed at a conference of Hoover supporters here late yesterday, was promptly telegraphed to Hoover at Washington D. C.

Attorney Thad H. Brown, Columbus, former secretary of state, presided at the conference. The resolution was introduced by Attorney Herbert Mills, Dayton, former assistant attorney general of Ohio. Unanimously adopted, the resolution was signed by Dr. W. O. Thompson, Columbus, president emeritus of Ohio State university; Sen. Chester C. Bolton, Cleveland, Republican leader in the Ohio senate; Rep. Martin S. Dodd, Toledo, G. O. P. leader in the Ohio house of representatives, Thad H. Brown and others.

The conferees introduced Attorney Brown to appoint an executive committee, consisting of from three to seven members, to direct circulation throughout the state of petitions urging Hoover to enter the Ohio presidential preference primary race.

It was indicated that this committee will be selected within a few days. These petitions, when signed, will be forwarded to Hoover, it was announced.

STEWART, SENATE IN COURT BATTLE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—(INS)—One of the most unusual and dramatic legal battles in the nation's history opened before Justice Jennings Bailey in district supreme court today when Col. Robert W. Stewart, millionaire head of the Standard Oil company of Indiana, appeared to ask the court virtually to permanently enjoin the United States senate from arresting him for failure to answer questions in the oil investigation.

The government, seeking to dissolve the writ of habeas corpus under which Stewart won his freedom Saturday, lost no time in combating Stewart's position. With the opening of court, a petition was filed in the name of the United States senate, asking the court to dissolve the writ and return "the body of Robert W. Stewart" to the custody of the senate's officers.

William Toole, charged with failure to provide for an illegitimate child, appeared before Justice Friece Monday, and was released on a bond of $500 for his appearance before the grand jury. Deputy Carl Porter made the arrest.

RELEASED ON BOND

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7 (INS)—Appropriations totalling $18,955,000 with which to start work on nearly a hundred federal building projects throughout the country was asked of Congress today by the House appropriations committee.

TWO SLIGHTLY INJURED; AUTO SKIDS ON ROAD

Robert Thomas and Don Myers Hurt in Highway Mishap North of City.

Don Myers and Robert Thomas, both of Circleville, were slightly injured in an auto wreck Tuesday morning on the Scioto trail four and half miles north of this city. The car in which they were riding skidded off the slippery brick road and collided with the cement abutment of a bridge.

Seeing that a collision was inevitable, Robert Thomas jumped from the car injuring his right leg. His injuries were dressed by Dr. Howard Jones.

Myers stuck to the wheel and tried his best to avoid the collision. He sustained injuries to his right ankle, which will cause him to limp for several days. Dr. H. D. Jackson attended to his injuries.

The young men were on their way to the Y. M. C. A. battery and ignition school at Columbus where they are taking training in that line of work.

Mr. Myers says the car after leaving the brick pavement slid into fresh gravel and it was next to impossible to hold the car.

The right side of the body of car, a Chrysler 70, was caved in and was brought to the Circleville Motors garage for repairs.

QUESTIONS TOO MUCH FOR U. S. DRY OFFICERS

"School Teacher Examinations" for Raiders Ruining Force, Doran Says.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—(INS)—The federal dry regime is facing a critical situation throughout the nation unless the civil service commission abandons its "school teacher examinations" for dry agents, Dr. J. M. Doran, prohibition commissioner, told a house appropriation sub-committee, it was disclosed in hearings made public today.

Complete demoralization of the service was pictured by Dr. Doran in frank testimony taken behind closed doors.

Mental tests for dry agents should be "incidental," he asserted in an assault upon the civil service commission.

As a result of the failure of 75 per cent of the 2,000 field agents to pass the examination for their transfer into civil service, many of the best agents must be discharged, he said.

They can serve only 30 days after a list of eligibles is certified, and this list, he said, will be too small to fill vacancies.

Answering a question by Rep. Hardy (R) of Colorado, Doran agreed that the effects of the examination would be to give the service "a good bunch of school teachers instead of a good bunch of police officials."

Music World Predicts Sensation as Tennessee Girl Makes Operatic Bow

By SHIRLEY KIRKE
International Illustrated News
Staff Correspondent

The barriers that for so many years seemed impenetrable to native-born talent aspiring for operatic honors are being smashed to pieces.

The dramatic debut and subsequent resounding success scored by Marion Talley seems to have started the fashion.

And now we have a second American prima donna in the person of Grace Moore, who is making her debut Tuesday at the Metropolitan Opera House, the holiest of holies in the world, the dream and ambition and life-goal of countless thousands all over the world.

Grace Moore was born and "raised" as the quaint saying goes, in the 10 per cent. American town of Jellico, Tennessee. You'll have to consult a rather large map to find that little dot on the landscape, but find it you will.

Modern Medical Science Triumphs In Parting Siamese Twins When One Dies

OTTAWA, Ill., Feb. 7.—(INS)—The story of how modern surgical science was used on newly-born Siamese twins to save the life of one after the other had been born dead, was revealed here today.

On Feb. 1, in a little farmhouse near Marseilles, Ill., twin daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Keller. Dr. Paul R. Clark, LaSalle county physician, assisted at the birth.

The infants were joined together at the abdomen in such manner that the same blood stream coursed through both bodies. Otherwise they appeared perfectly normal. But only one of them cried. Efforts to start respiration in the second little body failed.

Then Dr. Clark detected that there was no heart action in the second little body, that it was in fact dead, but that the heart of the living child was still pumping blood through both bodies.

Realizing that the child's heart could not stand this strain long, he decided on an operation to separate the two little bodies.

He and the father quickly rigged up an "incubator," made of a closed box, lined with blankets and hot water bottles, and hurried to a hospital at Ottawa.

There ether was administered and the delicate operation attempted. It proved successful. Twenty stitches were taken in the living child's abdomen.

The child is still living and is apparently hale and hearty.

THIRTY NAMES ARE LISTED BY JUDGE CURTAIN

Decision Reached When Only One Prospective Juror Remains in Court.

A new special venire of 30 prospective jurors was summoned into the Pickaway county common pleas court Tuesday afternoon for the trial of James Flint, alias Walter Brown, colored, who is under indictment for first degree murder in connection with the fatal shooting on Nov. 14, 1927, of John Henry Hill, also colored. The trial started Monday.

Judge Clarence Curtain, the presiding jurist, announced at noon Tuesday that he would prepare a special list of prospective jurors to be served with subpoenas.

The decision of Judge Curtain was made when court adjourned at noon with but one name remaining on the list of the special venire of 50 drawn for the trial.

16 Challenges Unused
At that time the jury panel was filled, but the state had not used any of its four preemptory challenges and the defense had 12 of its original 16 remaining.

Under a recent Ohio law the defense challenges must be made in blocks of four and every four defense challenges the state must make one or be charged with it as made.

At noon Tuesday the only remaining prospective juror of the original venire of 50 was Mrs. Charles Keiger. The last juror tentatively seated was Charles Stoer. Others in the jury box with him were Mrs. Guy Heffner, Mrs. William Leist, Ira Scothorn, P. L. Johnson, George Pressler, Mrs. Anna Ball, Mrs. Ed McClaren, Milton Fullen, A. J. Lyle, Cecil Briggs and Miss Lena May.

Four prospective jurors who were challenged by the defense were James T. Timmons, Albert Leist, Henry Forquer and R. T. Liston.

Sober Procedure

While the work of selecting a jury to hear the trial is going forward slowly, the entire court procedure is marked by a soberness and seriousness which has not been characteristic of many recent murder trials in other cities where the sensational and emotional possibilities have been exploited to the fullest by all concerned.

The attorneys for the state and defense admitted at noon Tuesday that there seemed little likelihood of a jury being obtained before Tuesday evening. There is a possibility, they point out, that the jury may not be empaneled before Wednesday morning when the taking of testimony probably will begin.

FAIR FOR BABY CHICKS WILL BE HELD AT O. S. U.

Show Sponsored By Department of Poultry Husbandry To Be First of Kind.

There have been automobile shows, horse shows, dog shows, and baby shows, but the National Baby Chick Fair to be held at the Ohio State University at Columbus, by the department of poultry husbandry, March 22 and 23 will be the first of its kind. The purpose is to display baby chick equipment, and to give educational lectures on chick raising, during the hatching and rearing season.

Practically all of the phases of baby chick production, including incubation, brooding, diseases, feeding, and marketing broilers, will be discussed by men who are authorities in their various lines, according to E. L. Dakan, head of the department.

Extensive Exhibit
At the same time, an exhibit of the most modern equipment for converting eggs into chicks will be held. Manufacturers and commercial dealers will display incubators, brooders, and brooding devices, houses and equipment, such as water fountains and feeders, during the two-day show.

Also, a large number of commercial hatcheries and breeding establishments, as well as baby chicks and breeding association, are being invited to contribute to the display. Commercial feeds of all kinds, including milk products, packing house products, and minerals, may be seen, if present plans are carried out.

Plan Demonstrations
Eggs being incubated, chicks hatching, and older chicks actually being brooded in the same building with the exhibits so that visual demonstrations of the workability of the devices can be noted, are some of the novel features which the show will include.

A meeting of the Ohio Lumber Dealers Association is being called in connection with the Chick Fair to acquaint the lumber dealer with the various phases of poultry housing.

Parking Ban Hits Snag In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 7.—(UP)—A proposed plan for eliminating downtown parking has met the opposition of many business men here. The opposition is led by City Manager William R. Hopkins who is backed by several retail merchants whose stores are situated in the affected area.

The no-parking plan is sponsored by Col. Joseph H. Alexander, president of the Cleveland Railway Co., and is very similar to the recent Chicago ban on parking in the congested area.

A party of local business men are said to be prepared to spend $10,000,000 for the construction of mammoth downtown garages to handle the autos in case legislation prohibiting parking is passed.

Americanization Class Is Dwindling In Denver

DENVER, Feb. 7.—(INS)—Denver's foreign population has been thoroughly "Americanized," if attendance at the night classes in English and Americanization is any criterion.

Charles Moruzzi, teacher at the school, maintained at government expense, has notified federal naturalization examiners that the institution will be closed unless a larger number of prospective American citizens avail themselves of the free instruction in citizenship.

Moruzzi said that the total enrollment, almost exclusively Italians, was fifteen.

PORTSMOUTH COP IS FATALLY SHOT

PORTSMOUTH, O., Feb. 7.—(UP)—William Green, 30, and Willie H. Wilson, 32, negroes, will be arraigned here today in connection with the murder of Traffic Officer Paul Frederick, 26.

Frederick was fatally wounded after he stopped the pair for questioning. One of the negroes opened fire without warning, wounding Frederick in the abdomen.

The officer crawled 50 feet to a police phone to tell police headquarters of what had occurred.

Four eye-witnesses to the shooting joined police in the search for the negroes who were captured in the residential district.

German Chemists Plan Pool With Americans to Produce New Nitrogen

BERLIN, Feb. 7.—(INS)—The formation of a German-American pool for the production of nitrogen based on the recently discovered Haber-Bosch process is said to be the main object of a trip to the United States by Bosch scheduled to take place in spring.

Bosch represents the biggest German chemical concern, the "I. G. Farbenindustrie." He goes to America to complete negotiations between the "Farbenindustrie" and the American Dupont trust, which have been going on for some time with the purpose of practical exploitation of the Haber-Bosch process for the production of nitrogen.

The negotiations are said to have been deadlocked over the question of the allotment of shares to the I. G. Farbenindustrie, if it came to the foundation of a new company. The Dupont trust was to get the majority of the shares but obviously the I. G. Farbenindustrie wants this changed.

BIG FIGHT FOR PLAYER PLACES ON TIGER NINE

Rivals Will Battle Each Other For Practically Every Position on Team.

DETROIT, Feb. 7.—(INS)—When the big crew of Tigers assemble in San Antonio there will be one of the most desperate fights of athlete to gain jobs the Tigers have known in years. With one or two exceptions there will be battles by rival players for all the positions.

The Tigers are taking an extra large squad to Texas, but they will not carry through the season a larger group than usual. League rules limit all clubs to 25 men and most of them employ two or three less than that number.

Manager Moriarty can use only three outfielders at one time. He can afford to carry not more than five in all. Yet he is taking eight of them into the southland to fight for places. Of the eight, Heilmann, and possibly Fothergill may be reasonably sure of being first string outfielders. Harry Rice, on past performances is favored to win the third place. That will leave Wingo, Rubie, Holland, Wade and Stone to battle it out to see who will be the other two survivors, assuming that Rice makes good. Unless he hits better than he did last year, even Rice may have to fight hard for a job.

Infield Scrap

In the Tiger infield the scrap will be even more intense. There are nine infielders all of whom are seeking the four regular jobs. Hardly a man in the inner garden can be said to have a regular job cinched. Neun at first, and Gehring at second seem reasonably secure but the others are in doubt. Tavenor at first is a fine fielder but his value this year will depend upon whether a finger he injured last season heals up so he can throw which he could not do late last season. Warner at third is a fine fielder in spots but his batting is weak.

However, all of these fellows are to be challenged for their jobs. Neun will have to fight off Bill Sweeney, a youthful first sacker, who starred with Fort Worth last season. He is not only a great fielder but a leading batter. Gehring will be faced by the necessity of beating Marty McManus. Tavenor will have two rivals in Chick Galloway and Frank Emmer, the latter having made a fine reputation with Minneapolis last season. Tavenor's arm must be as good if he is to head this pair off. Warner will be attacked by Nolen Richardson, who made a good record with Fort Worth last season. If Richardson lives up to his reputation he will give Warner a good run for his money.

The fight for survival also will be taken up by the battery candidates. Four men will vie for the honors of becoming first string catchers. There will be not more than three carried and two will do practically all the work. The candidates are Woodall, Shea, Hargrave, and Phillips.

The Tiger Star

The first two named were with the Tigers last year, Woodall leading the league in fielding. He is quite sure to be the Tiger star. The other three must fight it out. Shea showed well as a receiver and thrower, but was weak with the stick. Hargrave did well with Toronto both field and bat. Phillips comes from Nashville where he set up an enviable record. The men who survive this contest should be satisfactory.

Fourteen pitchers will try for jobs. Not more than 10 will be retained and unless they are good the staff will be cut to nine. Of the 14 candidates just half that number pitched with more or less success for the Tigers last season. The old men are Billings, Carroll, Gibson, Holloway, Smith, Stoner and Whitehill. The new comers include Vangilder, a veteran from the

by Dave Keene

By DAVE KEENE

From an investment of approximately sixty-five millions of dollars, represented in 24 studios in the Hollywood area, comes the motion picture product which entertains, or otherwise, the majority of the film-going public of the world. Think of it! Eighty-five per cent of motion pictures produced in the world are produced in Hollywood, California, a community that is not even a corporate entity, but a part of Los Angeles. And all within a space of 17 years. The first motion picture studio in Hollywood was that of the Christie company, erected Oct. 27, 1911. The first studio was a former Chinese laundry, it is said.

Things never seen in Hollywood—James Cruze wearing a hat. One maker supplies his caps; always has and always will.

A little group gathered at one of the Boulevard meeting places the other night laughed long and heartily at Adolphe Menjou's newest story. Menjou told of an actor whose snow-white hair offered cameramen a difficult problem. The halation, or false light from the white hair under the burning arcs, made focusing impossible. "So my old friend dyed his hair pink to kill the glow," Menjou declared soberly, "and the poor fellow was embarrassed to death when he found that part of the film was to be made in technicolor."

Little Doris, the wardrobe girl confides to me that Bebe Daniels' newest outfit consists of a beige tweed suit trimmed in natural lynx, a beige felt hat, nude hose, brown alligator oxfords and envelope purse to match.

There are more automobile finance companies to the square mile in Hollywood than in any other city in America. Also more gasoline filling stations, more tearooms and more pretty girls to wait table in them. The auto finance companies flourish because of the large number of people here who want to "take it big," as the saying goes around where films are made. Young girls and boys, achieving first success after months of struggle and disappointment, want the world to know that they "got their break." Nothing will advertise the fact so well as a special-built Rolls. Cad, Lincoln, Cunningham, Mercedes or Pierce. But it all works out well in the end. Thrifty buyers in the market for a repossessed car find a wide variety to choose from on the second-hand lots. Many of the cars have not been driven far.

Hal Roach has just made a two-reel comedy in which custard pies are thrown in every scene except the subtitles. At a preview the other evening the audience in a very hot-totsty house nearly went into hysterics when it was shown. They loved it. Now what is it the critics say about art?

"Why! Her hair really is red, flaming red!" That remark I heard at the Montmartre an afternoon or two ago. The friend in Los Angeles was showing John and Ida from Indiana the movie city sights. The high spot of the day was when they caught a glimpse of Clara Bow, filmdoms' current sensation. Elinor Glyn took one look at Clara and then went home and wrote "It." And no wonder. Five or six years ago she was a student in Bayridge high school, Brooklyn, New York. One of the Brewster magazines announced a popularity contest with a screen contract for the winner. Girls all over the country sent in their pictures. Neyssa McMein, Howard Chandler Christie and James Montgomery Flagg finally decided that Clara Bow was the winner. And now look at her. Her fan mail receipts are close to 25,000 letters a month. And how she can drive her various automobiles is nobody's business.

Chester Conklin, the walrus-mustached comedian, is now in Hawaii. W. C. Fields, his comedy teammate, received this radio-gram from him: "You're a liar stop pineapples, don't grow on trees stop you have broken my heart and I'll never trust another man."

Greta Garbo, who has made John Gilbert one of the most envied of men, developed a little habit of reporting for work very late in the mornings when she first arrived in Hollywood. Her director responsible to the producer for making the picture on schedule tried many ways to remedy the situation. His pleadings were in vain. His threats drew an iciness that froze him up. Miss Garbo, sweetly apologetic, made it clear that she just could not get on the set at 9 a. m. Then one day the director had an inspiration. He held his company until 9:30 and then dismissed them. When Miss Garbo arrived at her usual hour of 11 she walked all over the lot looking for the troupe. Then someone whispered in her ear. The next morning she was there on time.

Seen here and there on Hollywood boulevard: Reginald Denny in a green roadster. Malcolm St. Clair with his funny little hat. Lon Chaney buying a bag of popcorn. Francis X. Bushman Jr., and his still-handsome dad.

Checking up on last-minute production news at the various studios I find that:—young Charlie Farrell has just signed a new contract with Fox and will go to Europe in June to make a picture. Sidney Chaplin, Charley's brother is making a film in England. Victor McLaglen will play the lead in a picture, "The Hangman's House" Dolores del Rio has just signed a contract to star for United Artists—there is talk that Jack Dempsey will make a picture. Pola Negri's next picture is titled "Three Sinners." James Hall is to be Bebe Daniels' leading man in her next starring picture.

"WOMEN TO BLAME" IF AUDIENCE DOZES

Elaborate Meals at Community Meets Too Heavy For Listeners.

Speakers who address audiences which have just eaten meals served by "the ladies of the community" and who find their audiences sleepy and unresponsive, may blame the ladies who served the meal, according to the nutrition specialists of the home economics department of the extension service of the Ohio State University.

"If a menu is planned, and only those foods planned for are served, the complaint of the speakers will be done away with, and much time and labor will be saved for those who are preparing the meal," says the Home Economics Department. "Too often the meal is so elaborate that it requires the women to miss the program in order to prepare and serve the food."

The specialists point out that the variety of foods should be limited, since great variety is not necessary to meet food requirements, and entails too much work for the foods committee.

Five menu suggestions for community meals made by the specialists are:

1. Escalloped ham and potatoes, cabbage and carrot salad, whole wheat bread and butter sandwiches, canned fruit, cake, cocoa or milk.
2. Baked beans, vegetable salad, brown bread and white bread sandwiches, canned fruit or ice cream, cookies, cocoa or milk.
3. Vegetable stew, cottage cheese or meat sandwiches, celery, baked apples, cake, milk or cocoa.
4. Chicken, cottage cheese, egg or meat sandwiches, whole creamed potatoes, buttered string beans, celery, fruit salad, cookies, milk or cocoa.
5. Cold sliced ham, escalloped potatoes, slaw, whole wheat bread and butter sandwiches, brown boty with cream, milk or cocoa.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—(INS)—"Anchoy Twists" make a nice bit to finish off the dinner.

Take scraps of short pastry and work in some grated Parmesan cheese, then roll out very thinly.

Cut strips the length of the anchovy and about one inch wide. Wash and wipe the required number of anchovy filets and lay one one each strip of pastry. Twist them around each other and pinch together at the ends. Lay them on a greased baking-tin, sprinkle with pepper and bake in a good oven. Serve hot with parsley.

EXTENDS FIRST AID TO TAX CONSCIENCE

Federal Bureau Offers Guide to What Is Deductible From Farm-Income.

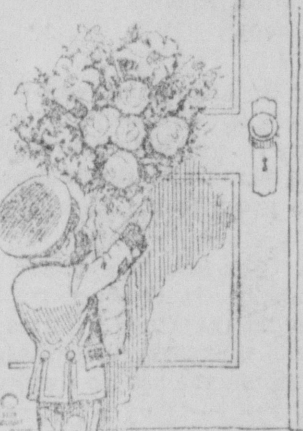

Conscience as a guide in the making out of this year's income tax report, will get a little definite assistance from information which has been sent out by the federal bureau of internal revenue. The bureau lists, specifically, some of the items which may or may not be deducted from the income.

Says the Bureau, "the purchase price of an automobile, even when used wholly in farm operation, may not be deducted as an expense, since it is regarded as an investment of capital. The cost of gasoline, repairs and upkeep of an automobile, if used partly in the business and partly for pleasure, may be apportioned accordingly and that portion attributable to business, deducted."

"Necessary expenses incurred during 1927 in the operation of the farm as a business enterprise, may be deducted from gross income in ascertaining net income. These include the expense of harvesting and marketing of crops, and the cost of seed and fertilizer used. The farmer used up in the course of a year or may deduct the cost of small tools too, wages paid to farm hands, and rent paid for farm land and buildings other than the dwelling.

"He may deduct the cost of repairs to fences, wagons and machinery, also bills for horseshoeing, stock powders, rock salt, veterinary service, insurance except on the dwelling, and gasoline for operating power. Produce raised on the farm and used in the board of farm laborers may not be deducted as an expense. The farmer may, however, deduct the price of food purchased for his laborers."

BIBLE THOUGHT

GOD AND MAN—Lord, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!—Psalm 144:3.

PRAYER—Lord, Thou didst make us but a little lower than Thyself and crowned us with glory and honor.

Boy Temperament

The boys of today are to be the men of tomorrow, who will make our country. It is a very vital question as to how they are developing. Teachers, camp directors, etc., can give us many side lights on what the future of the country should be.

A well known man teacher, who has run a boy camp in a vacation resort for nearly 20 years, was asked recently how he thought the boys of to-day compare with those he came in contact with when "They are more easily led, and are more amenable to discipline," he said. "But they do not have as much initiative as they had then."

He attributed what he felt was their lack of initiative to the city life of today. The city boy is not thrown so much on his own resources as the country boy is. He thus is likely to have less originality. But this teacher seemed to feel that modern life is developing better behaved boys. They are learning that they can't get anywhere if they break away from school discipline. They have learned that to take a good standing in athletics, to get promoted in their classes, or to get a good job when they finish their education, they have to conform to the rules of the school and get their lessons.

This is a great gain. A great many boys and girls seem to come along rather well as long as they are under the discipline of their home town schools. But when they get out from under the discipline the modern spirit of independence seizes hold of them, and they often go to undesirable extremes. What they need are fine clubs and various organizations that shall direct their attitude as young folks to the best aims of citizenship and character.

Loud Talk

Someone recently put a bill into Congress, making it an offense punishable by a fine of not over $200, to speak in a loud and unusual tone in the District of Columbia.

The motive for introducing such a bill is not clear. Possibly it was intended humorously. Perhaps the petitioner was annoyed by the boisterous talk frequently heard from rough people on the streets, and thought some way should be found to curb it.

Unfortunately the hoodlums and rowdies are not the only ones who indulge in loud talk. Some orators think that their speeches give a greater impression of power if they shout at the tops of their voices. Some people in private conversation seem to think their words carry more weight if uttered in a loud voice. But it is noticeable that people who occupy positions of great authority are apt to talk rather quietly. They depend upon their force of character, their information, and their insight to support their authority, more than upon the wind behind their accents.

Reaching Out For Trade

Businessmen sometimes fail to realize that in these times when so many people have automobiles, they will travel a very considerable distance in order to reach what they consider an attractive and profitable trading center.

The merchants in any community need a systematic plan for reaching out into the outskirts of the trading territory of which they are the center, and if they are active and wide awake they can draw trade from nearer places which are less enterprising. Printers' ink is the medium with which the interest of the people in the outlying towns can be aroused. The Herald would be glad to make practical suggestions to any merchants who would like to extend their trade further out into the country.

Aerial Traffic Rules

It is easy to sympathize with young Bert Acosta, transatlantic flier, for his arrest in Connecticut; but the fact remains that the law under which he was arrested—a state law barring aviators from "stunting" or flying low over cities—is a good law.

Other states might do well to copy it. If a pilot brings his plane low over crowded city streets he is not only risking his own life but endangers the lives of everyone beneath him. If his engine stalls unexpectedly he has to come down in the street—and if you'll try to picture a speeding airplane landing in a crowded city street you'll realize that this would be a mighty serious matter.

Compel all flyers to stay at least 5000 feet in the air when passing over cities or towns. It won't be long before there will be so many planes in use that such a statute will be needed badly.

Mr. Fall's Story

Albert E. Fall is quoted in press dispatches as saying that the transaction whereby he received some $230,000 from Harry F. Sinclair was perfectly open and above board. He professes considerable indignation to think that anyone could suppose it anything else.

For all we may know he may be entirely right. Perhaps the money transaction was, after all, something altogether honorable.

But if so, it does seem a bit odd that it took a special act of Congress and four years of investigation to bring it to light.

A safety razor has been reported stolen from an Akron man. The chances are that the poor chap had just bought some new blades, too!

The RAMBLER

By NORMAN W. RALSTON

THE NIGHT

THE NIGHT
Brings
Solace
To my soul
When I am half-way
To my goal,
The day brings sorrow
Work and toil,
And my poor blood's
Inclined
To boil
When I fall short
My nightly dreams—
Reality
Is cruel, it seems—
In morning
I go forth to work
And what is there
That I would shirk,
At noon
I've cooled down
Quite a bit
And I'm not having Fun at it,
And so before
The day is Done,
And my set goal
Is half-way
Won,
I feel that I
Have lost
The Fight,
There's not a thing
I do
That's right—
And that is why
The night
Seems best
For man finds dreams
And also rest—

And what we mean to say
Is,
Go forth each day
To greet the morn
Forgetting
That
You are forlorn,
The day brings roses
From their sleep
And life goes forth
To fly or creep—
Each day is precious,
You will find,
If you will toil
And be
Half-kind.

The Epic of the Air "WE" By Charles A. Lindbergh

CHAPTER XXVI.

I expected to be able to locate my position approximately on the coast of Europe by the terrain. Ireland is somewhat mountainous; England rather hilly on the southern end; France is a lowland along the coast; Spain is mountainous. Therefore the coastline should indicate the country, and my accurate position could be obtained by the contours of that coastline and by the position of towns, rivers and railroads.

During the time of construction it was necessary to arrange for all equipment to be carried on the flight; including equipment for emergency use in a forced landing. After the first few hours there would be enough air in the fuel tanks to keep the ship afloat for some time. I also carried an aircraft which could be inflated in several minutes and which could weather a fairly rough sea.

In addition to food for the actual flight, I carried five tins of army rations each of which contained one day's food and which could be made to last much longer if necessary. I carried two canteens of water; one containing a quart for use during the actual flight and the other containing a gallon for emergency.

In addition to this water, I had an Armbrust cup which is a device for condensing the moisture from human breath into drinking water. The cup is cloth covered and contains a series of baffle plates through which the breath is blown. The cup is immersed in water and then removed and blown through. The evaporation of the water on the outside cools the cup walls and baffle plates on which the breath moisture collects and runs down to the bottom of the cup.

The following is a list of the equipment carried on the flight:

- Flashlights.
- Ball of string
- Ball of cord.
- Hunting knife.
- Red flares sealed in rubber tubes.
- Match safe with matches.
- Large needle.
- Canteen—4qts.
- Canteen—1 qt.
- Armbrust cup.
- Air raft, pump and repair kit.
- Cans, Army emergency rations.
- Air cushions.
- Hack saw blade.

Near the end of April the factory work was completed and early one morning, the forty-six foot wing was taken out of the second floor of the factory onto the top of a freight car and then lowered to a waiting truck by means of a gasoline crane. A few days later the plane was completely assembled in its hangar, and on April 28, or sixty days after the order had been placed, I gave "The Spirit of St. Louis," her test flight.

The actual performance was above the theoretical. The plane was off the ground in six and one-eighth seconds, or in 165 feet, and was carrying over 400 pounds in extra gas tanks and equipment.

The maximum air speed meter reading was 128 M. P. H., and the climb excellent.

The load tests were made from the old Camp Kerny parade grounds near San Diego. At daybreak, one foggy morning, I took off from the field at Dutch Flats and headed for the Army's three kilometer speed course along Coronado Strand. The visibility became extremely bad over San Diego harbor and I was forced to land at Rockwell Field, North Island, and wait for the fog to lift before running the speed tests.

The sun soon dispelled the fog and I took the plane four times over the speed course at an average of 129 M. P. H. in a slight cross wind. I was carrying about twenty-five gallons of gasoline and over 400 pounds of extra tanks and equipment.

On the way to Camp Kearny I ran a number of tests on the relation of motor R. P. M. to air speed and by the time I reached the old parade-grounds' field I had collected quite a bit of valuable test data.

I decided to run one more test before landing and had it about half way completed when I allowed the data board to come too close to the window where a gust of air carried it out of the cockpit. I was flying over mesquite, over five miles from Camp Kearny at about a 1,200-foot altitude at the time, and could only spiral around and watch the board flutter down into the top of a mesquite bush.

SYNOPSIS
Fabien, good and handsome youth of France, trains for the priesthood; but meets and loves Manon Lescaut, beautiful orphan, whose rascally brother, realizing her worldly value, borrows her to Ravoire, rich connoisseur of women. Fabien saves her and carries her off to Paris. Manon's brother steals her for Ravoire. Circumstances force her to surrender to Ravoire. Fabien, thinking her perfidious, returns to his studies. But Manon seeks him, explains, and they go to Paris again, where they live in dreamlike splendor.

"Oh, Lord!" ejaculated Fabien. "You will have to pardon me, my dear. I will return when I do not have to share you with so many." Fabien hurried to Manon's side and kissed her finger tips gallantly.

"Wait!" she commanded gaily. "Help me up first." Fabien lifted her to the side of the great bed. "Thank you—no, don't go yet—my slippers next!" She extended bare, pink little feet and as Fabien fitted on her satin slippers she bent over and kissed him provokingly on the forehead. Turning away with a laugh, before he could imprison her hands, she began struggling into a filmy negligee. Fabien came to the rescue and wrapped her lovely figure in its fragrant folds.

"Now, my lady, will you descend?" he inquired with mock dignity, offering his hand. Manon touched it gently with her finger tips and with exaggerated grace stepped from the dias to the floor—like a queen descending from her throne.

"Darling, one kiss—" Manon stood on tiptoes with pursed lips. "Yes—now you may go, but come back very soon." She watched Fabien depart; then turning to the maid with a big happy sigh she said, "Marie, have them come in."

They came. A troupe of morning callers who sat about and chatted while the hairdressers prepared Manon for the festivities of the day.

The Abbe Martheau was a quaint little figure. Manon's beauty had inspired him to write verse and the first thing he did was to perch himself on the arm of a big chair, at one end of her dressing table, and indulge in the pleasure of reading aloud while her coiffure was being arranged before his very eyes. It was just intimate enough to please him immeasurably. Fabien, in his reading were due not so much to emotion as to intervals in which he sipped wine and times when others intruded for a moment of Manon's time.

Manon was charming and attentive, with the result that the little man came every day and remained long enough to read a new couplet and imbibe a glass of wine. The Abbe's presence, on this particular morning, annoyed Nana excessively. She did not have any perfume that compared with Manon's and the special bottle she wanted was on the corner of the dressing table where the Abbe interfered with her getting it. In the meantime she glowered at the little man and consoling herself by smelling the contents of every other bottle she could get her hands on. When she found a scent that she liked a generous portion was immediately transferred to her fingers and then brushed across her lips.

"Do you like that odor, Nana?" inquired Manon, who had been watching her with amusement. "Yes, it is most seductive—what do you call it?"

"It's yours, if you want it," replied Manon generously. "I couldn't think of it," protested Nana, but she had already decided to take the crystal and gold bottle as well as the rare perfume.

"That is all right, Nana; Fabien will buy more—he gives me everything I want."

"Yes, I have noticed—I don't see how you manage it," drawled Nana with mingled admiration and envy. "I have never owned as much jewelry as you have discarded."

Manon knew that Nana referred to the Comte de Ravoire's gifts, and it was annoying to have that episode of her life revived. Besides she hated to have anyone think that Fabien had not done a great deal more for her.

Opening a dressing table drawer, Manon took out a handsome velvet case and offered it for Nana's inspection. A priceless diamond pendant glittered handsomely from the rich velvet box.

"Isn't it a darling?" she inquired proudly.

"It is more beautiful than the Comte's ruby necklace." Nana's admiration was sincere. "Fabien brought it to me last night." Manon lifted the jewel from the box and slipped the delicate chain over her head.

The hairdressers had just completed their pleasant duty and Manon's callers gathered about to inspect her new gift.

She made a lovely picture, sitting there before her mirror, so happy in her love, with her lover's latest extravagant gift sparkling from its nesting place on her breast.

Unknown to everyone, Fabien was the most absorbed spectator of the little scene.

Since leaving Manon's boudoir he had wandered about the great house trying to settle upon some way to handle the pressing need for money. His father had disowned him. Tibergers was still friendly and compassionate, but his means were limited, and even if he gave up all he had it would not be sufficient to meet their extravagant mode of living. It did not occur to Fabien to live simply, because Manon's nature demanded luxuries and amusement and he felt that he should be man enough to provide them for her. Also, he loved her in the gay happy mood that were hers in the midst of their present surroundings and some way, some how, he was determined to provide all that her pleasure loving nature craved.

Fabien had not settled on any definite financial plan when he recalled Manon's request to "come back very soon." He returned to her boudoir and chanced to arrive at the open door just as she was showing her necklace. Fabien remained outside, a look of comic dismay on his worried face.

A few days before Manon had described the jewel to him with such enthusiasm that he could not resist surprising her with it as a gift. No one knew better than he how ill he could afford the indulgence. But when he saw what a beautiful picture she made in its reflected glory he did not regret the extravagance. The incident only drove home the fact that he must raise money—a quantity of money—before many more days passed into eternity and carried him along in a hopeless maze of bills and insistent bailiffs.

Fabien did not join the admiring throng gathered about Manon. He was about to enter when a servant quietly approached and said: "Monsieur, there are two gentlemen in the drawing room who insist upon seeing Monsieur."

Fabien tried to put Manon out of his thoughts as he went downstairs to confront the two gentlemen. He knew only too well who they were and what they wanted. Their presence in his home was not welcome and he dreaded the consequences of the enforced interview.

CHAPTER XVI
When Fabien entered the drawing room he felt two pairs of piercing eyes centered upon him.

The humiliation and annoyance that had been his before entering the door changed to an air of amused nonchalance. The situation was indeed an amusing one. Why not play up to it and ignore the danger involved? At least it would be a new and refreshing way to receive the callers.

"Good afternoon, gentlemen," Fabien bowed politely as though they were distinguished guests. "I had not expected to have the pleasure of receiving you again so soon."

The two men plainly showed their surprise at this unexpected greeting and as a result the things they had intended saying came out in unintelligible sputters. One of them began searching his pockets for a paper that it was his duty to serve. Fabien saw the gesture and with an amused twinkle and deliberate misconstruction said:

"Won't you try some of mine?" offering his snuff box. "Perhaps you left yours at home."

"We didn't come here to take snuff with you—and you know it!" shouted the angry bailiff, at last finding his tongue.

Plan State Contest

The Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs is conducting a campaign for More Adequately Equipped Homes. The Federation is conducting an essay contest among students from the seventh to the twelfth grades, inclusive. The themes adjudged the best will win prizes consisting of cash rewards for 32 students and trips to Washington for eight students and their mothers, all expenses paid.

Instead of giving the trips to the writers of the eight best essays in the state, as at first announced, it has been decided to give them to the best in each district, of which there will be eight, Pickaway county being in the South-East District.

Themes will be judged 80 per cent on thought and 20 per cent on English and neatness.

The contest closes Feb. 22. District winners will be announced March 13. Winners of trip and their mothers start to Washington on March 25, and return on March 30.

To Honor Glee Club

A Valentine Luncheon, honoring the Republican Women's Glee Club, will be given on Tuesday, Feb. 14, in the ball room of the Neil House in Columbus. Mrs. E. F. Anderson, of Circleville, is taking reservations for this affair, and persons wishing to attend, should call her immediately.

In School Chapel

The students of Circleville high school met in the auditorium Monday morning for chapel exercises, which were opened by singing "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," followed by other selections sung by the entire student body.

Principal R. F. Cain, then introduced Dr. Franklin McElfresh of the Methodist church, who spoke with great feeling and a wide knowledge of two great Americans, whose birthdays come in February—Lincoln and Washington. He offered as a motto on which to establish one's life, "Clean Hands and a Pure Heart." Everyone enjoyed his interesting and straightforward talk.

Mr. Cain then spoke for a few moments, of a cross examination about the presidents. It was found that out of the number of students present, 25 had birthdays in February.

The theme of Mr. Cain's talk was "Should I obey my father and my mother?" In an interesting manner, he showed the students that they should, and received their hearty applause.

Plans are being made for other Monday morning chapel services to be held in the auditorium.

To Give Lecture

Through the courtesy of the Rainbow Tours of Columbus, there will be an illustrated lecture at the High School Auditorium, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. M. L. F. Martindale, who is chief ranger in Yellowstone National park, will speak on "Bird and Animal Life in Yellowstone Park." This interesting lecture will be illustrated by motion pictures and beautiful colored slides. The admission is free and will be a pleasant evening for those who have been travelers in the Park or who are contemplating such a trip.

At Board Meeting

Mrs. E. F. Anderson, of East Main street, went to Columbus Tuesday, where she attended a meeting of the Board of Governors of the Council of Republican Women, which was called by the Chairman, Mrs. Le Van. The meeting was held at the Desher hotel.

Invitations Issued

Mr. and Mrs. James I. Smith have issued invitations to a dinner party at 6:30 o'clock on Thursday, at their home on South Court street.

Monday Club Meets

The division of the Monday club study, for Monday evening, was "Literature," of which Mrs. Carl Ritz is chairman. Under the head, "Religion in Fiction," Miss Grace Moodie read a paper on "Religion in American Fiction of the Nineties," quoting Dickens. Miss Moodie said, "It was the worst of times; it was the best of times."

The world still held to its moorings of the life, devoted to Christ. Every book or story must have its moral. "In His Steps," by Dr. Sheldon; "Singular Life," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; "Song of Issachar," by E. S. Brooks; "Song of Prophets," by George Anson Jackson; "Maggie" by Stephan Crane, and "The Choir Invisible," by James Lane Allen, mirror this time.

Miss Sadie Brunner in a paper on "Religion in Contemporary Fiction," considered H. G. Wells, Compton, McKenzie, Sheila Kaye-Smith, May Sinclair, Archibald Marshall, G. K. Chesterton, Ethel Mannin, A. S. M. Hutchinson, and John Oxenham.

"There are more English than American religious writers," said Miss Brunner, "because there are more deep thinkers and more writers in England, who have sprung from an atmosphere of literature, than in our country."

"Religion in American Literature," was given by Mrs. William Ulin. "Never was religion more discussed in books; but alas! it is pagan. The profound, noble, decorum of the past, is lost in a frank profanity," was the speaker's verdict of to-day's literature.

However, Fosdick, Stanley Jones, George Stewart, and Bruce Barton were named as worth while writers.

Under Current Events, by Mrs. Emil Toensmeier, The Lausanne Conference of Churches, The Federation of Churches meeting in Columbus in January, The Atheistic Fight on the Gideons, and the Controversy, over the Change in the English Prayer Book, were the topics chosen.

And, as proof, that all is well, the gist of an article, "Is Science a Blind Alley," that appears in the February Harper's, was quoted. It is: "Science can never take the place of religion, in that it can only tell us HOW. The thinking world demands to know WHY." And this was written by a scientist.

This will be the regular monthly meeting which was postponed from last week because of the United States band concert. The February committee, of which Mrs. L. N. Abernethy is chairman, will provide the entertainment and serve refreshments.

At Heffner Home.

Mrs. Harvey Heffner and Miss Mary Heffner have asked 24 friends to a bridge party Friday afternoon at two o'clock at their home on East Mound street.

For Son's Birthday.

The party which Mrs. Lloyd Jones had Monday afternoon for her little son, Lloyd, was in celebration of his fourth birthday. There were 17 of his friends present, who spend a merry afternoon with favors of false noses and spectacles and balloons, and in throwing confetti and playing games. The guests were Peggy Goeller, Virginia Hulse, Martha Hulse, Mary Fickard, Mary Jane Connelly, Mary Virginia Crites, Mary Carolyn Goeller, Polly Anna Friedman, Margaret Boggs, William Bennett Heffner, Dick Beechey, Bobby Kline, Frank Davis, David Orr, Howard Orr, David Yates, Charles Groce Will, John Goeller, and Hildeburn Jones. Mrs. Howard Jones and Miss Eleanor Jones assisted the hostess.

Hungary Watches Case Of 'Hereditary Patricide' For Three Generations

BUDAPEST, Feb. 7.—(INS)—A case of hereditary patricide unique in criminal annals is recorded from the District of Isaszeg where the nineteen year old Johann Skebek killed his forty-year old father with an axe. The father was a man who when he was nineteen had also stabbed to death his father who likewise was the murderer of his father.

Grandfather, father and son were patricides. But the son, Johanna is not likely to carry on the tradition. Present day criminal justice in Hungary promises to send him to the penitentiary for life, safe from the fate which his own baby son may have been preparing for him out of family habit.

TUNNEY BELIEVES DEMPSEY HAS QUIT RING GAME

GENE ASSERTS JACK REFUSED "HUGE PURSE"

Champion Says He Signed For Only One Bout—Depressed Over Income Tax.

By LES CONKLIN
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—Gene Tunney wants to defend his title twice this year but he may fight only once because he thinks that Jack Dempsey is through and will not be available for a bout this fall. The heavyweight champion, outlining his ring plans today, said he was convinced that Dempsey has quit the squared circle for all time. "Right now I am signed for only one bout this year," said Gene. "It will be in June, against the winner of the elimination tournament between Sharkey, Risko, Delaney and Heeney."

"I want two bouts, but it may be that no outstanding opponent will be available for a second match."

Figures Income Tax
Tunney is back in his home town for a ten-day visit. The champion was visibly depressed. Far from that dear Miami shore, with its golf and swimming, he must go into a huddle with the income tax collector concerning his tax return for 1927. Since he earned a cool million in the Dempsey bout at Chicago alone last year, the Tunney bankroll is due to absorb considerable punishment.

Gene revealed that promoter Tex Rickard offered Dempsey "a huge purse" for a title bout next September.

"When Jack turned down that offer, I knew he was through," continued the champ. "I believe that his eyes are troubling him and that he will not risk a further injury to them. Once I had eye trouble for months, myself."

After a learned discussion of muscular ailments in the optic regions, Tunney declared that he is now in perfect condition. He said he weighs only 193 pounds. Against Dempsey in Chicago he weighed 189 1-2.

Favors Sharkey
The champion declared he had no intention of defending his title in Chicago under the promotion of Jim Mullen.

Gene expressed the opinion that the list of challengers for his crown was limited to Sharkey, Heeney, Delaney and Risko.

"Paulino has been beaten three times in New York," he said. "George Godfrey's knockouts against set-ups mean nothing. He has lost many decisions in many towns."

Tunney emphasized that he is in perfect agreement with the plans of Tex Rickard.

"When you fight for Rickard you are sure of getting your money," he concluded.

SPORTSMATTER BY FRANK GETTY

The second annual Olympic winter sports will start this week at St. Moritz, Switzerland.

The United States is represented by a strong team, including speedskaters, ski-men, figure skaters and bob-sleighters.

A victory in a majority of the events on the winter program would start this country off on the right track towards another triumph in another Olympiad, but those familiar with conditions under which the sports of St. Moritz are to be conducted predict strong competition from the French and Germans.

Germany is making a particularly strong bid for Olympic honors this year, and would have no objection to starting in right away with a victory in the winter games.

These games, of course, do not compare in importance with those at Amsterdam next July, but there is no harm in winning them, if one has a mind to do so.

Germany and France have entered the strongest teams. Strangely enough, Japan is to be represented in the winter sports. There is a Japanese team in the 50 kilometre ski race, the 18-kilometre ski race, the ski-jumping and the combination race.

American men and women are entered in 11 events, as follows: speed skating, figure skating for men, and for women, couple skating, ski-running and jumping, two ski races and one event for jumpers, what is known as a skeleton race, the ice hockey matches and bob-sleighting. Twenty-four nations, a record number, are taking part in this week's program at St. Moritz.

As for the Olympic games at Amsterdam, which will come later in the year, no little dissatisfaction is being expressed in connection with the water sports.

European rowing authorities are squawking about the facilities for the crews which will compete at Amsterdam.

The strip of water selected for the Olympic races is exceedingly narrow.

Only two boats can row abreast on the course chosen by the Netherlands Olympic Committee.

Since between 30 and 40 crews will compete, each of the survivors must row four races in five days.

With plans completed for sending to Amsterdam a capable team of American boxers, it is interesting to note that Great Britain also will be represented in boxing at the 1928 Olympic Games.

A special meeting of the Amateur Boxing Association of Great Britain recently passed a resolution to send a team of boxers to the 9th Olympiad. This over-ruled a previous decision.

The British will be represented in the rowing events at Amsterdam, also, although the British Amateur Rowing Association has voted not to send crews.

The National Amateur Rowing Association, which has almost as much to say where water sports are concerned, has decided to send a crew to the Olympics.

FINE MATCHES IN WRESTLING SHOW AT GYM

Small Crowd Witnesses Fast and Furious Grappling—Champ Held to Draw

A very small crowd witnessed the wrestling show at the C. A. C. Monday night. The few people who attended however, saw one of the best bills ever presented in Circleville.

In the opener Dan Copen threw Ted Lathrop with a reverse armlock and body scissors after 10 minutes of fast and furious wrestling.

Joe Snyder, of Lancaster, lost to Ray Phillips, of Shepherd, O., in the second match, with a body scissors and armlock in the last five seconds of the match. This was a thriller all the way, and the two were even up until the fall was scored.

In the semi-final, Jack Landers, state lightweight champion had his hands full with Merle Dolby, formerly of Ashville. Landers won the first fall with a leg split in 16 minutes. Dolby came back to win the second fall with an arm stretch in 14 minutes, and they wrestled the duration of the match to a draw. This was a very interesting match and the draw was a popular decision.

The last bout was the most sensational of the evening. Carl Bughtler, of Marysville, tangled with Thomas Teeters, of Bluefield, W. Va. Teeters took the first fall with a cradle hold in seven minutes flat, but Bughtler scored the next with a hammerlock in quick time. The next and deciding fall was a whirlwind affair with first one and then the other being thrown out of the ring. Several times the referee was mistaken for a wrestler and he was on the floor most of the time. Bughtler, who by the way, is about the roughest person imaginable, won the last fall in 8 minutes, after he had been thrown out of the ring by Teeters.

Due to the poor attendance, quite a bit of money was lost on the show, but the people who saw the matches went away satisfied. It is the policy of the C. A. C. to sponsor athletic events which the public cares for, but they can not do so, without the patronage which they deserve.

ATLANTA AND JACKSON SPLIT FLOOR GAMES

Township Boys Take Short End of 32 to 15 Score—Player Is Injured.

Jackson girls were again victorious, Friday night when they took Atlanta's measure, 14-8. The game was well played throughout. Atlanta showed that they were game losers, for they played hard until the final whistle. They were inferior to Jackson in most respects, but excelled in shooting fouls.

Ours and M. Finley monopolized the scoring for Jackson, scoring six and eight points respectively. Southward and Wolford played well at guard, while Farmer and Kirk played best for Atlanta.

The Jackson girls have shown a remarkable improvement, due to the efficient coaching of Mr. Lampl.

The Jackson boys did not fare so well, taking the short end of a 32-15 count. The game was marred by unintentional injuries to both teams. Price suffered a fracture of the nose while cranking an automobile before the game, and will probably be lost to the team for the remainder of the season. Jackson lost out when they were unable to stop Turner, Kirk and Evans who proceeded to pile up a commanding lead that was never challenged.

Line-up:

MADRID, Feb. 7 — (INS) — Alphonso XIII, of Spain, is the recent recipient of a handsome automobile gift from a well-known American firm.

Inside of the pockets the king found the following note:

"It has been with the greatest pleasure that we have constructed this car, knowing that it was destined to the use of His Majesty, the King of Spain. We wish him a long and happy life. Vive Spain! from two Spanish workmen."

The note was signed I. G. R. The king was greatly touched by this mark of sympathy and immediately asked to be informed of their names in order that he might thank them personally.

THE MAKING OF NEW PLANTS

Where do we get the new plants that are offered by dealers each year? How is the interminable procession of novelties kept up?

The making of new plants is one of the most fascinating developments of modern science for it is to scientific plant breeding that we owe most of them. Formerly the chief source of supply rested in plant explorers securing remote countries of the world and sending back new species of plant life that they discovered. As the surface of the earth becomes more carefully explored, this source for new garden material diminishes. Of late years the interior of China and Thibet have yielded the greatest quantities of new plants. Of the plants listed in commercial catalogues, the primroses have, perhaps, shown the greatest number of additions. Specialists list a hundred or so species and varieties, a large portion of them brought into cultivation within the last 20 years.

New varieties occasionally appear in plantations so distinct as to warrant being regarded as distinct species. These are known as mutants, a term applied by the Belgian scientist, Prof. Hugo DeVries, who devised the famous mutations theory to account for the appearance of new species of plants. There are continual slight variations in plants and by cultivating these slight variations through several generations new types are often secured. The Shirley poppy owed its origin to a common red poppy showing a faint line of white on the petal. Seed of this poppy was saved and sown through several generations saving only those which showed increasing white until now we have this race of pale-colored poppies. This process is known as selection.

Only plants closely related will cross successfully. When they are remotely related they are known as wide crosses and seedlings are likely to produce monstrous forms or, if desirable, to prove sterile, that is, unable to form or produce seed. Breeding progress, therefore stops. Such plants are known as "mules" from their similarity to the domestic animal, which cannot reproduce itself by mating with its kind. This is common among the pink, the old Dianthus Napoleon III being a mule pink. It can be propagated only by cuttings.

But by far the greatest number of new varieties of our new plants and new strains of plants are the result of scientific hybridization.

FERN LIKES SHADE, NOT DARK CORNERS

Gloom Is Unsited to Plant—Old Fashioned Boston Variety Is Best.

Because a fern is able to grow in the shade, is no alibi for sticking it away in a dark corner of a room and expecting it to grow as well as it would in a window with some sunlight, it is pointed out by Victor H. Ries, extension floriculturist of the Ohio State University. But that ability of the fern to get on with less sunlight than some other plants need, adapts it for use as a house plant.

Best of all the varieties, in Ries' opinion, is the old fashioned Boston Fern with its long, graceful fronds. But it is often too large for the average house, where the dwarf Boston or "Teddy Junior" will suit. These are all the simpler leaved Boston ferns. There are many, however, which have the finely and delicately divided leaves, such as Whitman's fern," says Ries. "They are not, as a rule, as satisfactory as the Boston ferns.

"All ferns prefer a sandy, coarse, well-drained soil, so we can make up an excellent fern soil by mixing leaf mold and a light, sandy loam. To this, for fertilizer, we may add a little well-rotted manure or a small amount of bone meal. Drainage may be secured by putting in an abundant quality of broken pot in the bottom of each pot."

The P. T. A. will meet in the school auditorium, Wednesday night of next week.

John Vaughn, Sr., was called to Muncie, Ind., by the sickness and death of his mother. Her death occurred at her home, Saturday morning.

Veni, Vidi, Vinci — They came, they saw, they conquered. That is just what Atlanta Hi basket ball team did at Jackson Township school last Friday night. When Coach Miller's team went on the floor they thought possibly their task was not an easy one, but they proceeded to take care of their opponents with much ease. It's no use to query on what might have been because what really was, pleased the large delegation from A. H. S. when the last whistle sounded and the score stood 22 to 15. The Atlanta girls put up a strong fight, but went down in defeat to the Jackson girls' team.

"Order of the Road" To Make British Motorists Study Skillful Driving

LONDON, Feb. 7 — (INS) — A new "round table" and Knightly Order for motorists, which will be known as "The Order of the Road" has been organized here, with the object of encouraging skillful driving and making the roads of the country safer for all users.

The qualifications are that no driver can become a member of the order unless he can produce evidence which will satisfy the executive committee that he has driven a motor-car for at least ten thousand miles.

All members of the Order will be identified by an appropriate badge. They pledge first object will always be consideration for all drivers, cyclists, pedestrians and other road users whenever he is driving on a public highway.

Hamburg's Lucky Streak

Hamburg, one of Germany's largest cities, might be still only a small port if the American colonies had not rebelled against English rule and won the Revolutionary war. A large part of the trade of the continent of Europe that formerly went through London was diverted to Hamburg as the result of that conflict, and the city grew by leaps and bounds, relates Pathfinder Magazine. Now it and its suburbs have about 2,250,000 population. Bremen and Stettin also had a remarkable growth during the German expansion period, but Hamburg had the advantage over these ports by having deep water.

Cat-Tails Not Popular

Cat-tails have a disagreeable odor that is not easily removed and for that reason they are not satisfactory when used for upholstering and making mattresses. Cat-tails are not used commercially in this country. In England they were used for upholstering prior to the time that kapok was introduced from Java.

OHIO FARMS DIDN'T SHARE IN FORTUNE

National Agricultural Prosperity Worked Other Way For State Grain Growers.

National agricultural prosperity in 1927 seems a myth to the Ohio farmer because it doesn't apply to him with anything like the force with which it applies to farmers in other states, it is pointed out by V. R. Wertz of the staff of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, now attached to the rural economics department of the Ohio State University.

Low production of grains in Ohio was largely responsible for Ohio's gross income to agriculture falling behind that of agriculture generally, Wertz says. The gross income of Ohio farmers fell behind that of 1926, while the income of farmers in other states are rising.

While corn production in the United States rose to 3 1-2 per cent above its 1926 level, the 1927 Ohio crop fell below that of 1926. Likewise the United States wheat crop of 1927 was a per cent above that of 1926, whereas the Ohio wheat crop was 28 per cent less. The oat crop of the United States was only 4 per cent under that of last year, but the Ohio crop fell 19 per cent below the 1926 yield.

"This is a case," says Wertz, "in which the cause for a strengthened agricultural situation in the country at large, and more especially in the central western states, has worked to the detriment of Ohio, for while an increased production in the country as a whole lowered the price per bushel which Ohio farmers received for their grain, lower production in Ohio gave them less to sell.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7 — (INS) — Jeanne Eagles, noted actress, today refused to confirm or deny reports that she is preparing a divorce action against her husband Ted Coy, former Yale football star.

French Foreign Legion Has Fascination For Germany's Young Men

BERLIN, Feb. 7 — (INS) — Despite all warnings and stories of hard life in the French foreign legion, this famous fighting organization continues to exercise an irresistible fascination for Germany's young men.

The number of Germans trying to enlist in the legion has become so big that the border recruiting stations have had to raise the physical standard to reduce the number of enlistments, according to reports in the German press.

More than 100 young German enlisted within a few days in Metz alone. Fifty-seven were rejected.

Among those enlisting were German students and other members of the so-called academic classes.

This Thing of Building Desires

The function of the retail store has extended beyond the business of supplying a market. It must also create one—if it is to tap the pipeline of greater possibilities.

Too often advertising is based on assumption that the public already desires the goods—that its wants have been developed.

Only about 25 percent of the electric wired homes have electric toasters, an item that can be bought for a small sum. About 37 percent have vacuum cleaners, a little over 25 per cent have clothes washers, and less than 2 per cent have ironing machines.

Electrical appliances may be an exception. Yet it is reasonable to suppose that there are vast numbers who do not buy new rugs, new furniture, more clothes and personal items simply because they have not been educated to want these things.

Retailing cannot afford to assume that the "want" is there.

Retail advertising at all times must be alert to the necessity of creating desires.

—What's become of the proposition to give Circleville some boulevard lights?

—If we hear anyone kick about the weather Circleville is having now we're going to murder them in cold blood and throw ourselves on the good hearts of a jury.

—A Russian newspaper says farmers lynch dandies as horse thieves in the United States. And we hear that over in Russia they lynch horse thieves as dandies.

—The movie operators in Chicago went on strike and theaters were closed. Maybe Mayor Thompson was just a bit indiscreet in defying King George like that.

—Memories of almost a century and a quarter of California history were sealed at Pomona, Cal., when Dona Perra Mora, who was 122 years old, died. Two surviving brothers are each more than a century old.

—Quite a crowd was in attendance at the opening of Circleville's first murder trial on Monday. This is the first murder case that has been heard in Pickaway County Common Pleas Court since around 1911, according to the clerk of courts.

—A Parisian proposes to take five days out of the calendar and give them names, leaving 12 months of 30 days each. Fine, if he can think up a rhyme so we can remember when the five days come.

—How do you like The Circleville Herald now? We're gradually making improvements and we'd like to know what you think of them. Do you read the daily market reports for grain, produce, hogs and cattle? They come into The Herald office over telegraph wires each day and are right up to snuff.

—Tomorrow, Wednesday, The Circleville Herald will publish classified advertisements free of charge. Don't fail to send one in; give them a trial, as it doesn't cost you a cent. You may have something to sell, barter or give away. You may want to buy something. Perhaps you want a job. Whatever it is, let a Herald want ad work for you tomorrow for nothing.

—One magic trick we used to like to help out the magician in the good old days we never see performed any more. That was the one where the magician came into the audience and poured different kinds of liquors out of the same bottle and allowed us a taste. Ah, me! Them good old days. What mattered if he did crack the bottle afterward and take out a guinea pig.

—Because jurors in the case of Dan Downer, at Yakima, Wash., drank all of the two quarts of bonded liquor passed into the jury room as evidence Downer did not have a fair trial, in the opinion of Judge Mitchell Gilliam, Downer was granted a new trial.

Had the liquor been evenly divided possibly no talisman would have been incapacitated before deciding the case, the judge held in his decision.

NEW VENIRE CALLED IN MURDER TRIAL

CLUES LACKING IN SEARCH FOR BANK ROBBERS

Bandits Who Looted Washington C. H. Institution May Be In Canada.

WASHINGTON, C. H., Feb. 7.—(INS)—Attaches of the Peoples' and Drovers' Bank, here, were checking their records today to determine the amount stolen from that institution by five armed bandits yesterday. Officials of the bank reported this morning that their estimate of approximately $200,000 in cash and negotiable bonds would doubtless be found correct. About $25,000 of this sum was in currency.

County authorities and bank detectives who were called in immediately after the robbery, reported today they had uncovered no clues.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 7.—(INS)—That the five men who early yesterday robbed the Peoples' and Drovers' bank of Washington C. H., of $200,000 in cash and negotiable bonds, escaped toward Canada, seemed probable here today, when a report was received by Columbus police, from Marion.

A filling station attendant at Marion reported that group of men drove to his station yesterday and after purchasing gasoline tendered a hundred dollar bill in payment. They drove north, he said.

The impact hurled Betty Colville into the windshield, but she was not hurt. George Colville was in the back seat of the Dodge.

The back and the fender of the Cadillac were damaged, as well as the lights and bumper on the Dodge, the wind shield of which was also broken.

New Rat Killing Method Will Be Shown In County

In the midst of pest hunts conducted throughout different sections of the county in which the rat mortalities were numbered in the thousands, here comes a special rat gassing campaign.

M. P. Jones, Entomology Department, Ohio State university, will assist H. S. Lewis, county agent, in conducting rat killing demonstrations in the county on Feb. 13 and 14.

These demonstrations are designed to acquaint farmers with the value of Cyanogas and methods of using it in exterminating rats.

The annual rat toll exacted from Pickaway county farmers runs into thousands of dollars.

HOOVER URGED TO ENTER OHIO PRIMARY RACE

Buckeye Supporters of Secretary of Commerce Seek to Oppose Willis.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 7.—(INS)—Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover today had under consideration a resolution, signed by more than three score Ohio Republicans, including well known G. O. P. leaders of the Buckeye state urging him to declare himself a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination and to enter the campaign which precedes the Ohio presidential preference primaries to be held on April 25.

The resolution, which was introduced and signed at a conference of Hoover supporters here late yesterday, was promptly telegraphed to Hoover at Washington D. C.

Attorney Thad H. Brown, Columbus, former secretary of state, presided at the conference. The resolution was introduced by Attorney Herbert Mills, Dayton, former assistant attorney general of Ohio. Unanimously adopted, the resolution was signed by Dr. W. O. Thompson, Columbus, president emeritus of Ohio State university; Sen. Chester C. Bolton, Cleveland, Republican leader in the Ohio senate; Rep. Martin S. Dodd, Toledo, G. O. P. leader in the Ohio house of representatives, Thad H. Brown and others.

The conferees introduced Attorney Brown to appoint an executive committee, consisting of from three to seven members, to direct circulation throughout the state of petitions urging Hoover to enter the Ohio presidential preference primary race.

It was indicated that this committee will be selected within a few days. These petitions, when signed, will be forwarded to Hoover, it was announced.

STEWART, SENATE IN COURT BATTLE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—(INS)—One of the most unusual and dramatic legal battles in the nation's history opened before Justice Jennings Bailey in district supreme court today when Col. Robert W. Stewart, millionaire head of the Standard Oil company of Indiana, appeared to ask the court virtually to permanently enjoin the United States senate from arresting him for failure to answer questions in the oil investigation.

The government, seeking to dissolve the writ of habeas corpus under which Stewart won his freedom Saturday, lost no time in combatting Stewart's position. With the opening of court, a petition was filed in the name of the United States senate, asking the court to dissolve the writ and return "the body of Robert W. Stewart" to the custody of the senate's officers.

TWO SLIGHTLY INJURED; AUTO SKIDS ON ROAD

Robert Thomas and Don Myers Hurt in Highway Mishap North of City.

Don Myers and Robert Thomas, both of Circleville, were slightly injured in an auto wreck Tuesday morning on the Scioto trail four and half miles north of this city. The car in which they were riding skidded off the slippery brick road and collided with the cement abutment of a bridge.

Seeing that a collision was inevitable, Robert Thomas jumped from the car injuring his right leg. His injuries were dressed by Dr. Howard Jones.

Myers stuck to the wheel and tried his best to avoid the collision. He sustained injuries to his right ankle, which will cause him to limp for several days. Dr. H. D. Jackson attended to his injuries. The young men were on their way to the Y. M. C. A. battery and ignition school at Columbus where they are taking training in that line of work.

Mr. Myers says the car after leaving the brick pavement slid into fresh gravel and it was next to impossible to hold the car.

The right side of the body of car, a Chrysler 70, was caved in and was brought to the Circleville Motors garage for repairs.

QUESTIONS TOO MUCH FOR U. S. DRY OFFICERS

"School Teacher Examinations" for Raiders Ruining Force, Doran Says.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—(INS)—The federal dry regime is facing a critical situation throughout the nation unless the civil service commission abandons its "school teacher examinations" for dry agents, Dr. J. M. Doran, prohibition commissioner, told a house appropriation subcommittee, it was disclosed in hearings made public today.

Complete demoralization of the service was pictured by Dr. Doran in frank testimony taken behind closed doors.

Mental tests for dry agents should be "incidental," he asserted in an assault upon the civil service commission.

As a result of the failure of 75 per cent of the 2,000 field agents to pass the examination for their transfer into civil service, many of the best agents must be discharged, he said.

They can serve only 30 days after a list of eligibles is certified, and this list, he said, will be too small to fill vacancies.

Answering a question by Rep. Hardy (R) of Colorado, Doran agreed that the effects of the examination would be to give the service "a good bunch of school teachers instead of a good bunch of police officials."

Music World Predicts Sensation as Tennessee Girl Makes Operatic Bow

By SHIRLEY KIRKE
International Illustrated News
Staff Correspondent

The barriers that for so many years seemed impenetrable to native-born talent aspiring for operatic honors are being smashed to pieces.

The dramatic debut and subsequent resounding success scored by Marion Talley seems to have started the fashion.

And now we have a second American prima donna in the person of Grace Moore, who is making her debut Tuesday at the Metropolitan Opera House, the holiest of holies in the world, the dream and ambition and life-goal of countless thousands all over the world.

Grace Moore was born and "raised," as the quaint saying goes, in the 10 per cent American town of Jellico, Tennessee. You'll have to consult a rather large map to find that little dot on the landscape, but find it you will.

THIRTY NAMES ARE LISTED BY JUDGE CURTAIN

Decision Reached When Only One Prospective Juror Remains in Court.

A new special venire of 30 prospective jurors was summoned into the Pickaway county common pleas court Tuesday afternoon for the trial of James Flint, alias Walter Brown, colored, who is under indictment for first degree murder in connection with the fatal shooting on Nov. 14, 1927, of John Henry Hill, also colored. The trial started Monday.

Judge Clarence Curtain, the presiding jurist, announced at noon Tuesday that he would prepare a special list of prospective jurors to be served with subpoenas.

The decision of Judge Curtain was made when court adjourned at noon with but one name remaining on the list of the special venire of 50 drawn for the trial.

16 Challenges Unused
At that time the jury panel was filled, but the state had not used any of its four preemptory challenges and the defense had 12 of its original 16 remaining.

Under a recent Ohio law the defense challenges must be made in blocks of four and every four defense challenges the state must make one or be charged with it as made.

At noon Tuesday the only remaining prospective juror of the original venire of 50 was Mrs. Charles Keiger. The last juror tentatively seated was Charles Stoer. Others in the jury box with him were Mrs. Guy Heffner, Mrs. William Leist, Ira Scothorn, P. L. Johnson, George Pressler, Mrs. Anna Ball, Mrs. Ed McClaren, Milton Fuller, A. J. Lyle, Cecil Briggs and Miss Lena May.

Four prospective jurors who were challenged by the defense were James T. Timmons, Albert Leist, Henry Forquer and R. T. Liston.

Sober Procedure

While the work of selecting a jury to hear the trial is going forward slowly, the entire court procedure is marked by a soberness and seriousness which has not been characteristic of many recent murder trials in other cities where the sensational and emotional possibilities have been exploited to the fullest by all concerned.

The attorneys for the state and defense admitted at noon Tuesday that there seemed little likelihood of a jury being obtained before Tuesday evening. There is a possibility, they point out, that the jury may not be empaneled before Wednesday morning when the taking of testimony probably will begin.

FAIR FOR BABY CHICKS WILL BE HELD AT O. S. U.

Show Sponsored By Department of Poultry Husbandry To Be First of Kind.

There have been automobile shows, horse shows, dog shows, and baby shows, but the National Baby Chick Fair to be held at the Ohio State University at Columbus, by the department of poultry husbandry, March 22 and 23 will be the first of its kind. The purpose is to display baby chick equipment, and to give educational lectures on chick raising, during the hatching and rearing season.

Practically all of the phases of baby chick production, including incubation, brooding, diseases, feeding, and marketing broilers, will be discussed by men who are authorities in their various lines, according to E. L. Dakan, head of the department.

Extensive Exhibit

At the same time, an exhibit of the most modern equipment for converting eggs into checks will be held. Manufacturers and commercial dealers will display incubators, brooders, and brooding devices, houses and equipment, such as water fountains and feeders, during the two-day show.

Also, a large number of commercial hatcheries and breeding establishments, as well as baby chick and breeding association, are being invited to contribute to the display. Commercial feeds of all kinds, including milk products, packing house products, and minerals, may be seen, if present plans are carried out.

Plan Demonstrations

Eggs being incubated, chicks hatching, and older chicks actually being brooded in the same building with the exhibits so that visual demonstrations of the workability of the devices can be noted, are some of the novel features which the show will include.

A meeting of the Ohio Lumber Dealers Association is being called in connection with the Chick Fair to acquaint the lumber dealer with the various phases of poultry housing.

Parking Ban Hits

Snag In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 7.—(UP)—A proposed plan for eliminating downtown parking has met the opposition of many business men here. The opposition is led by City Manager William R. Hopkins who is backed by several retail merchants whose stores are situated in the affected area.

The no-parking plan is sponsored by Col. Joseph H. Alexander, president of the Cleveland Railway Co., and is very similar to the recent Chicago ban on parking in the congested area.

A party of local business men are said to be prepared to spend $10,000,000 for the construction of mammoth downtown garages to handle the autos in case legislation prohibiting parking is passed.

Americanization Class Is Dwindling In Denver

DENVER, Feb. 7.—(INS)—Denver's foreign population has been thoroughly "Americanized," if attendance at the night classes in English and Americanization is any criterion.

Charles Moruzzi, teacher at the school, maintained at government expense, has notified federal naturalization examiners that the institution will be closed unless a larger number of prospective American citizens avail themselves of the free instruction in citizenship.

Moruzzi said that the total enrollment, almost exclusively Italians, was fifteen.

PORTSMOUTH COP IS FATALLY SHOT

PORTSMOUTH, O., Feb. 7.—(UP)—William Green, 30, and Willie H. Wilson, 32, negroes, will be arraigned here today in connection with the murder of Traffic Officer Paul Frederick, 26.

Frederick was fatally wounded after he stopped the pair for questioning. One of the negroes opened fire without warning, wounding Frederick in the abdomen.

The officer crawled 50 feet to a police phone to tell police headquarters of what had occurred. Four eye-witnesses to the shooting joined police in the search for the negroes who were captured in the residential district.

German Chemists Plan Pool With Americans to Produce New Nitrogen

BERLIN, Feb. 7.—(INS)—The formation of a German-American pool for the production of nitrogen based on the recently discovered Haber-Bosch process is said to be the main object of a trip to the United States by Bosch scheduled to take place in spring.

Bosch represents the biggest German chemical concern, the "I. G. Farbenindustrie." He goes to America to complete negotiations between the "Farbenindustrie" and the American Dupont trust, which have been going on for some time with the purpose of practical exploitation of the Haber-Bosch process for the production of nitrogen.

The negotiations are said to have been deadlocked over the question of the allotment of shares to the I. G. Farbenindustrie, if it came to the foundation of a new company. The Dupont trust was to get the majority of the shares but obviously the I. G. Farbenindustrie wants this changed.

BIG FIGHT FOR PLAYER PLACES ON TIGER NINE

Rivals Will Battle Each Other For Practically Every Position on Team.

DETROIT, Feb. 7.—(INS)—When the big crew of Tigers assemble in San Antonio there will be one of the most desperate fights of athlete to gain jobs the Tigers have known in years. With one or two exceptions there will be battles by rival players for all the positions.

The Tigers are taking an extra large squad to Texas, but they will not carry through the season a larger group than usual. League rules limit all clubs to 25 men and most of them employ two or three less than that number.

Manager Moriarty can use only three outfielders at one time. He can afford to carry not more than five in all. Yet he is taking eight of them into the southland to fight for places. Of the eight, Heilmann, and possibly Fothergill may be reasonably sure of being first string outfielders. Harry Rice, on past performances is favored to win the third place. That will leave Wingo, Ruble, Holland, Wade and Stone to battle it out to see who will be the other two survivors, assuming that Rice makes good. Unless he hits better than he did last year, even Rice may have to fight hard for a job.

Infield Scrap

In the Tiger infield the scrap will be even more intense. There are nine infielders all of whom are seeking the four regular jobs. Hardly a man in the inner garden can be said to have a regular job cinched. Neun at first, and Gehring at second seem reasonably secure but the others are in doubt.

Tavener at first is a fine fielder but his value this year will depend upon whether a finger he injured last season heals up so he can throw which he could not do late last season. Warner at third is a fine fielder in spots but his batting is weak.

However, all of these fellows are to be challenged for their jobs. Neun will have to fight off Bill Sweeney, a youthful first sacker, who starred with Fort Worth last season. He is not only a great fielder but a leading batter. Gehring will be faced by the necessity of beating Marty McManus. Tavener will have two rivals in Chick Galloway and Frank Emmer, the latter having made a fine reputation with Minneapolis last season. Tavener's arm must be as good if he is to head this pair off. Warner will be attacked by Nolan Richardson, who made a good record with Fort Worth last season. If Richardson lives up to his reputation he will give Warner a good run for his money.

The fight for survival also will be taken up by the battery candidates. Four men will vie for the honors of becoming first string catchers. There will be not more than three carried and two will do practically all the work. The candidates are Woodall, Shea, Hargrave, and Phillips.

The Tiger Star

The first two named were with the Tigers last year, Woodall leading the league in fielding. He is quite sure to be the Tiger star. The other three must fight it out. Shea showed well as a receiver and thrower, but was weak with the stick. Hargrave did well at bat. Phillips comes from Nashville where he set up an enviable record. The men who survive this contest should be satisfactory.

Fourteen pitchers will try for jobs. Not more than 10 will be retained and unless they are good the staff will be cut to nine. Of the 14 candidates just half that number pitched with more or less success for the Tigers last season. The old men are Billings, Carroll, Gibson, Holloway, Smith, Stoner and Whitehill. The new comers include Vangilder, a veteran from the

By DAVE KEENE

From an investment of approximately sixty-five millions of dollars, represented in 24 studios in the Hollywood area, comes the motion picture product which entertains, or otherwise, the majority of the film-going public of the world. Think of it! Eighty-five per cent of motion pictures produced in the world are produced in Hollywood, California, a community that is not even a corporate city, but a part of Los Angeles. And all within a space of 17 years. The first motion picture studio in Hollywood was that of the Christie company, erected Oct. 27, 1911. The first studio was a former Chinese laundry, it is said.

Things never seen in Hollywood—James Cruze wearing a hat. One maker supplies his caps; always has and always will.

A little group gathered at one of the Boulevard meeting places the other night laughed long and heartily at Adolphe Menjou's newest story. Menjou told of an actor whose snow-white hair offered cameramen a difficult problem. The halation, or false light from the white hair under the burning arcs, made focusing impossible. "So my old friend dyed his hair pink to kill the glow," Menjou declared soberly, "and the poor fellow was embarrassed to feel when he found that part of the film was to be made in technical."

Little Doris, the wardrobe girl confides to me that Bebe Daniels' newest outfit consists of a beige tweed suit trimmed in natural lynx, a beige felt hat, nude hose, brown alligator oxfords and envelope purse to match.

There are more automobile finance companies to the square mile in Hollywood than in any other city in America. Also more gasoline filling stations, more tearooms and more pretty girls to wait table in them. The auto finance companies flourish because of the large number of people here who want to "take it big," as the saying goes around where films are made. Young girls and boys, achieving first success after months of struggle and disappointment, want the world to know that they "got their break." Nothing will advertise the fact so well as a special-built Rolls Cad, Lincoln, Cunningham, Mercedes or Pierce. But it all works out well in the end. Thrifty buyers in the market for a repossessed car find a wide variety to choose from on the second-hand lots. Many of the cars have not been driven far.

Hal Roach has just made a two-reel comedy in which custard pies are thrown in every scene except the subtitles. At a preview the other evening the audience in a very hotly-tossed house nearly went into hysterics when it was shown. They loved it. Now what is it the critics say about art?

"Why! Her hair really is red, fanning red!" That remark I heard at the Montmartre an afternoon or two ago. The friend in Los Angeles was showing John and Ida from Indiana the movie city sights. The high spot of the day was when they caught a glimpse of Clara Bow, filmdoms' current sensation. Elinor Glyn took one look at Clara and then went home and wrote "It." And no wonder. Five or six years ago she was a student in Bayridge high school, Brooklyn, New York. One of the the Brewster magazines announced a popularity contest with a screen contract for the winner. Girls all over the country sent in their pictures. Neyssa McMein, Howard Chandler Christie and James Montgomery Flagg finally decided that Clara Bow was the winner. And now look at her. Her fan mail receipts are close to 25,000 letters a month. And how she can drive her various automobiles is nobody's business.

Browns, Jack Erwin, a right hander, from Paducah, Ky.; Hubbell, who has tried for two years to earn a job on the Tigers; Newman, a right hander from San Antonio; Paulson, drafted from Danville; Sullivan, tried out last spring and sent to Fort Worth and Teachout, a right hander, recalled from Hollywood.

Chester Conklin, the walrus-mustached comedian, is now in Hawaii. W. C. Fields, his comedy roommate, received this radio-gram from him: "You're a liar stop pineapples don't grow on trees stop you have broken my heart and I'll never trust another man."

Greta Garbo, who has made John Gilbert one of the most envied of men, developed a little habit of reporting for work very late in the mornings when she first arrived in Hollywood. Her director responsible to the producer for making the picture on schedule tried many ways to remedy the situation. His pleadings were in vain. His threats drew an iciness that froze him up. Miss Garbo, sweetly apologetic, made it clear that she just could not get on the set at 9 a. m. Then one day the director had an inspiration. He held his company until 9:30 and then dismissed them. When Miss Garbo arrived at her usual hour of 11 she walked all over the lot looking for the troupe. Then someone whispered in her ear. The next morning she was there on time.

Seen here and there on Hollywood boulevard: Reginald Denny in a green roadster, Malcolm St. Clair with his funny little hat, Lon Chaney buying a bag of popcorn. Francis X. Bushman Jr., and his still-handsome dad.

Checking up on last-minute production news at the various studios I find that:—young Charlie Farrell has just signed a new contract with Fox and will go to Europe in June to make a picture. Sidney Chaplin, Charlie's brother is making a film in England. Victor McLaglen will play the lead in a picture, "The Hangman's House" Dolores del Rio has just signed a contract to star for United Artists—there is talk that Jack Dempsey will make a picture. Pola Negri's next picture is titled "Three Sinners." James Hall is to be Bebe Daniels' leading man in her next starring picture.

New Factory to Copy "Spirit of St. Louis"

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 7.—(UP)—Construction of the $60,000 plant of the Curtiss-Robertson Airplane Manufacturing company, at the St. Louis Municipal Flying field, will begin soon, according to Maj. William B. Robertson, of St. Louis president of the corporation.

The airplane model to be built at the rate of one a day will be a monoplane similar in design to the "Spirit of St. Louis." It will sell for about $3,500 and will seat two passengers and a pilot in an up-holstered cabin. It will be driven by a Curtiss 90 horsepower motor and will have a cruising radius of 600 miles at a rate of 90 miles an hour. Its maximum speed will be 100 miles per hour.

Lindsey, chairman, New York; Roy Hoffman, Oklahoma, and William B. Follett, Oregon.

"WOMEN TO BLAME" IF AUDIENCE DOZES

Elaborate Meals at Community Meets Too Heavy For Listeners.

Speakers who address audiences which have just eaten meals served by "the ladies of the community" and who find their audiences sleepy and unresponsive, may blame the ladies who served the meal, according to the nutrition specialists of the home economics department of the extension service of the Ohio State University.

"If a menu is planned, and only those foods planned for are served, the complaint of the speakers will be done away with, and much time and labor will be saved for those who are preparing the meal," says the Home Economics Department. "Too often the meal is so elaborate that it requires the women to miss the program in order to prepare and serve the food."

The specialists point out that the variety of foods should be limited, since great variety is not necessary to meet food requirements, and entails too much work for the foods committee.

Five menu suggestions for community meals made by the specialists are:

1. Escalloped ham and potatoes, cabbage and carrot salad, whole wheat bread and butter sandwiches, canned fruit, cake, cocoa or milk.
2. Baked beans, vegetable salad, brown bread and white bread sandwiches, canned fruit or ice cream, cookies, cocoa or milk.
3. Vegetable stew, cottage cheese or meat sandwiches, celery, baked apples, cake, milk or cocoa.
4. Chicken, cottage cheese, egg or meat sandwiches, whole creamed potatoes, buttered string beans, celery, fruit salad, cookies, milk or cocoa.
5. Cold sliced ham, escalloped potatoes, salad, whole wheat bread and butter sandwiches, brown bot-ty with cream, milk or cocoa.

EXTENDS FIRST AID TO TAX CONSCIENCE

Federal Bureau Offers Guide to What Is Deductible From Farm Income.

Conscience as a guide in the making out of this year's income tax report, will get a little definite assistance from information which has been sent out by the federal bureau of internal revenue. The bureau lists, specifically, some of the items which may or may not be deducted from the income.

Says the Bureau, "the purchase price of an automobile, even when used wholly in farm operation, may not be deducted as an expense, since it is regarded as an investment of capital. The cost of gasoline, repairs and upkeep of an automobile, if used partly in the business and partly for pleasure, may be apportioned accordingly and that portion attributable to business, deducted."

"Necessary expenses incurred during 1927 in the operation of the farm as a business enterprise, may be deducted from gross income in ascertaining net income. These include the expense of harvesting and marketing of crops, and the cost of seed and fertilizer used. The farmer used up in the course of a year or may deduct the cost of small tools two, wages paid to farm hands, and rent paid for farm land and buildings other than the dwelling.

"He may deduct the cost of repairs to fences, wagons and machinery, also bills for horseshoeing, stock powders, rock salt, veterinary service, insurance except on the dwelling, and gasoline for operating power. Produce raised on the farm and used in the board of farm laborers may not be deducted as an expense. The farmer may, however, deduct the price of food purchased for his laborers."

Mental Backwardness in Children Must Be Watched

NORMAL STANDARDS GUIDE TO PARENTS

Cause for Alarm If Youngsters Show Signs of Retardation as Experts Are Able to Apply Corrective Measures.

By DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

PARENTS often worry about the possible mental backwardness of their children. They note, perhaps, that the youngsters are developing somewhat differently from those in the neighborhood and this alarms them.

LOUIS E. BISCH

Often, to be sure, such differences are not important. A single backward trait, for example, does not make a backward child. In all cases of mental retardation, especially in cases of out-and-out feeble-mindedness, several unmistakable signs of defect exist.

However, although parents should not become unduly alarmed, they should, nevertheless, face the facts about their children. There is no use flattering yourself that everything is all right when you have unmistakable evidence that it is not.

Indeed, when in doubt, it is better to find out the truth. Do not become panicky. Simply observe your child carefully, note all the important things that can be about him, then consult a specialist or go to some hospital clinic where mental tests are performed and you can get the benefit of expert advice.

There is a tremendous amount of developmental data that one must take into account in determining defectiveness, but the following list which I have compiled may serve as a guide to help you in making up your mind about your child's defectiveness.

IN INFANCY NOTE:

Did the child ever have any peculiar mannerisms such as repeated sudden hand-clapping, violent and persistent rocking, make peculiar grunting noises, or otherwise behave in an unusual manner?

Was the child very noticeably late in putting first teeth, in walking and talking, in holding up its head unsupported, etc?

Does the child know how to play? Does he get on well with other children?

Is he the object of continual ridicule?

Does he only get along with much younger children?

Has the child failed to show definite affection?

DURING THE SCHOOL YEARS NOTE:

Has the child ever repeated the same class more than once, or ever been put back? Was he ever placed in an ungraded or special class?

Is his memory defective? Is his curiosity lacking, or are powers of imitation, attention, reasoning, comparison, or imagination deficient?

Does the child play truant? Does he associate with gangs? Has he ever been arrested or stolen anything, or remained away from home all night?

Is punishment a corrective? Has he any coherence in plan of work at school or otherwise? Does he seem to know what he is doing and why he is doing it?

Is his thinking orderly and systematic or desultory and spasmodic? Does he talk of wild and nonsensical schemes? How does he respond when you reason with him?

Is his general attitude toward life practical or is it fantastical and "day-dreaming"?

Is he a "good mixer," or is he shunned by his companions? Does he maintain a seclusive, "shut-in" attitude? Is he much given to brooding?

Is he excessively fault-finding and irritable?

Is his increased interest in the opposite sex abnormal or does he show the society of the opposite sex altogether?

Answering these questions about your boy or girl will not, of course, prove conclusively what may be wrong with him one way or the other. Still, if your child does not measure up to the standards that the questions suggest it may be that some defect actually does exist.

Don't take chances if you suspect your child, or young son or daughter, is really markedly different from others of his or her sex and age.

Don't become frightened over little, occasional differences.

Watch and wait—but don't wait too long.

Unhappily, parents sometimes go to the other extreme and adopt an absolute do-nothing policy because they believe their defective child will "outgrow it."

If there is something really the matter with the brain development of your son or daughter make it a point to get the very best scientific attention you can and as quickly as you can.

Cupid's Assistants

By Paul Pim

CUPID has a staff of assistants. He is a very busy little fellow and he couldn't possibly be expected to attend to all the details himself. Of course, he looks after the main siege in person. No one else is permitted to minister to the heart, which region belongs to Dan alone. It is only in superficial matters that he calls upon his staff for help.

These assistants of Cupid are really Beauty's handmaidens. They serve her hand and foot and prepare the way for Dan's attack. One little elfin coaxes all the golden lustre into the Maiden's fragrant hair. Another shapes her lovely lips into Cupid's bow. A third will bring the delicate tints into her alabaster complexion. And so they attend upon Beauty at the same time serving their master.

A Mother's Sacrifice Often Misdirected

By WINIFRED BLACK

"WHAT about the mother who has spent twenty years watching, loving, sacrificing? I am a widow with two lovely boys, no girls.

"My eldest son is nineteen, big, fine, lovable. He is interested in a lovely girl of seventeen. I want him to go with nice girls, he is still in high school, but every minute he has he's encouraged to be with his girl and her mother. They keep him there night after night, way after eleven o'clock. I am not jealous, but I would love to have him at home sometimes, when he is not rushing me to death for his dinner and hunting for a clean shirt so he can go to Mary's. He is working part time but does not make money enough yet to pay for a room, board and all his clothes. He spends six or seven dollars for a room, board and all his clothes. He spends six or seven dollars over the week-end taking his girl to shows and feeding her.

"Her family probably never think that many times I give him the money to take their daughter to the very show that I would love to see myself. Why don't people stop to think where the money is coming from? Why don't they ever say, 'yes, John, we like you, we love to have you take Mary out, we feel that she is safe with you, but we know a young fellow going to school can't buy many theatre tickets, and we don't want your mother to pay our expenses. Here are the tickets—take our car tonight.'

"Why doesn't the girl's mother say, 'you really should not stay up so late—at least not two or three nights in succession—you and Mary should get a lot of sleep if you expect to do good work in school, and I expect your mother loves to have you with her some evenings, too.'

"Aren't men funny? All the way from six to sixty, and maybe to eighty, for all I know."

Rather interesting letter, isn't it? I felt sorry for Mother when I read it, didn't you?

And yet, poor mother—she doesn't want to take any of the blame herself, but she's determined to make Mary's mother do all the bossing and interfering.

The Individual Bob

By JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

WITH the present vogue for the individual bob it makes no difference from a standpoint of fashion whether the bob is long or short, whether it is sleekly pressed against the head or flatly waved, whether it is loosely curled in ringlets all over the head or allowed to fall softly around the face—it is the hair-line that makes or mars a woman's crowning glory.

Naturally the hair-line is the line around the face, the sides, and the back of the head where the hair ends and it is this line that must be cut and trained at just the right point if the full beauty of the coiffure and features is to be achieved.

For one woman this means that the hair must be long at the sides and short in the back; for another it means a shorter cut in front, with perhaps a modified shingle in the back. Each woman has one particular hair-line that is most flattering.

Some suggestions that may help you to determine what hair-line is best for your particular case are as follows:

If the face has a round, full contour the hair should never be cut shorter than on an even line with the mouth unless it is cropped very short. With this type of face a hair-line that comes below the cheek bones or above the mouth tends to widen an already rather wide face.

On the other hand, the long hair-line makes the face appear thinner than it is. The extremely short cut usually keeps the natural outline of the face without either lengthening or widening it.

If the neck is wide in the back a pointed widow's peak will make it appear thinner, while a natural or rounded line often offsets scrawliness in a thin neck.

An extremely boyish cut in the back frequently ruins a perfectly good, but somewhat long nose, by appearing to pull it out even farther.

A longer cut that permits some fullness in the back will keep the balance true. This much being so, it is easily understood how a rather short cut in the back will make a snub nose appear a little longer.

With these few examples of what it is possible to accomplish with the point hair-line I'll leave you to your own mirror and judgment, sincerely hoping that you'll have no difficulty in finding just the right place for parting, shaping and cutting your hair.

CARE WILL PREVENT ORDINARY DEAFNESS

Dr. Copeland Tells of His Own Experience in Conducting an Ear Clinic and Some of the Things He Learned.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

United States Senator from New York.

former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

DEAFNESS will be less common in years to come. The indirect causes of this ailment are becoming less formidable.

Of course there are several types of deafness. The nerve of hearing may not act as it should. The ends of this nerve in the complicated arrangement of the so-called "inner ear" may not be normally responsive.

There may be impacted wax in the ear canal acting as a stopper to close the passage. This shuts out the sounds, of course.

But the common cause for deafness is a catarrhal condition of the middle ear. The cavity between the ear drum and the inner ear is the seat of trouble in most instances of reduced hearing power.

When I used to hold an ear clinic at An Arbor most of my records showed this diagnosis: "O. M. C. C."

This means otitis media catarrhal chronica, or in the language of the natives, chronic catarrhal middle ear inflammation. This is the most frequently met of all ear conditions.

Running from the back of the nose to each middle ear is a passage-way, known as the "Eustachian tube." This is at the same time the drainage canal and the ventilation pipe of that little cavity.

It is important to have free passage of air to the middle ear, in order that the air pressure on the inside of the delicate membrane, the "ear drum," may be the same as the air pressure on the outside. You know how unpleasant it is, if you go up in a rapidly moving elevator, to have the ear drums pushed inward by the air pressure. It gives you a sensation of deafness and causes you to swallow or to blow the nose. This act forces air through the Eustachian tube to the ear and restores the air balance.

The nose, the Eustachian tube and the middle ear are lined with mucous membrane. It is a continuous, unbroken membrane, possessing practically the same qualities all the way. The tube is a little discharge from the nasal mucous membrane, you know. Likewise, there is moisture in the middle ear. The Eustachian tube is the drainage canal to carry this down into the nose.

All goes well with the delicate middle ear, so long as nose and Eustachian tube are normal. But if you take cold, the delicate channels, nasal catarrh, almost immediately the inflammation creeps up the Eustachian tube to the middle ear.

When the tissues of the nose swell up and begin to pour out a lot of mucus and "corruption," the lining of the Eustachian tube and middle ear begins to do the same thing. The swollen tube prevents free drainage and the middle ear is "stopped up."

Just as it would be if filled with vaseline.

If the catarrhal trouble becomes chronic, the membranes of the ear are thickened. In consequence, the ear drum does not move freely, the little bones of the ear are clogged, and the sound waves are not conducted to the inner ear. Deafness, then, any increasing deafness, is the natural result.

When we have perfect teeth, normal tonsils and care for the nose as we should, there will be fewer nasal colds and less danger to the hearing. Cleanliness, pure air and sunlight help to guard against infection. That is the secret of perfect hearing to the end of life.

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

Young Oak Tree Tells Dotty and Dee a Secret.

BY the time Dotty and Dee reached the place in the woods where their Daddy and Uncle were chopping wood, they were both tired out from their walk and sat down on a log.

"Oh, look, Dotty," Dee cried as she spied one end of the log. "Look how many bracelets this log has on. My, so many, I can't even count them."

"Well, of all things," said Dotty, leaning over to get a better look at the end of the log, "why, it's all covered with rings, isn't it?"

She called to her Daddy, but he couldn't tell her what it was ringed for.

"Just wrinkled, I guess, from old age," laughed Uncle Ned.

But Dotty and Dee weren't satisfied with the answer. They ran from one log to another until they reached the last log. It seemed to have even more rings around it than any of the others.

"I'd just give—" began Dotty when a soft whistle startled her and she stopped.

That at the other end of the log stood a dear little elf in a tall, pointed green hat, his face all smiles.

"Good-morning, girls," he laughed merrily. "I didn't want you to give anything away until you were sure of yourselves."

"Oh, Squeedee! You dear!" Dee cried. "We were just looking at those legs. Every one of them is covered with rings. What made those rings?"

"Well, of all things," chuckled another voice, and the young Oak Tree spread its branches above the children's heads, laughing until every leaf on its branches shook, and they call you folks wise. Why, don't you know what those rings are?"

"Squeedee! You dear!" Dotty said. "But now that you've spoken, maybe you can tell us better."

"I should be able to tell you if any one could," laughed the young tree. "That was my Mother Oak."

"Oh, oh, oh!" cried Dee jumping up and down. "Please, tell us what the rings are, Miss Young Oak."

"Glad to," laughed Young Oak. "I guess you both know the outer layer is called the bark of the tree. The next layer you see there is called the heart, it's the stringy fibers of wood."

"Used by gardeners to tie up their plants," interrupted Squeedee.

"So it is, Squeedee," continued Young Oak Tree. "Now between the bark and the heart is a sticky layer, which is the most important part of the whole stem, for in that layer all the new wood is formed. It's the real growing part of the tree."

"A new layer of wood, each year a wee bit lighter than the year before, so if you girls can count the rings, you can tell just how old the tree was before it was cut down. Most all these oak trees around here are my sisters. We all came from this Mother Oak's wee little acorns. She lived a good many years and has scattered much joy. She was glad to go and was singing as the cutters drew their saw through her trunk."

Just then, Uncle Ned came up in the wagon and piled the oak logs in. Dotty looked for Squeedee, but he had disappeared, so she and Dee hoped to find him in the wagon and rode downtown with Uncle Ned.

A Fashion Model's Diary

By GRACE THORNLIFFE

In Which She Discourses on Models for Sports Wear.

TODAY, Mrs. Kendall came into the shop, looking for a "serviceable knock-about coat," she said.

It should not have made a difficult selection, but it took her some time to find one with which she was entirely pleased.

She wanted a good sturdy coat, and yet she did not want one too tailored—and that's where the difficulty came in. We have many tweed sport models, but none of them suited.

"No, Madame," she said, "I don't like them. They have no chic."

"But," countered Madame, "you said that you wanted a serviceable knock-about."

"Exactly," replied Mrs. Kendall, "and that's just what these are—and nothing more. I'd like one with a little more style."

The rejected coats were all good models, sporting Burberry types, the kind in which smart West End London women turn out for Fall race meetings, but they were distinctly for sport and not the kind you could combine for sport and street wear, which was obviously what Mrs. Kendall wanted.

And just then, Helene came in with some new imports she had been unpacking. A tweed, blocked in rose and beige, caught Mrs. Kendall's eye.

"That one looks interesting," she said. "Let me see it."

Trying it on, she was delighted with the result.

"There," she exclaimed, "that's just what I wanted. It's not too tailored, and yet it's trim."

It was a plain wrap-around, with bushy cuffs of skunk, with a long scarf, edged with deep beige selvage and tipped with skunk. It was a French model. They refuse to sacri-

At any rate, Mrs. Kendall took the model.

Boy Temperament

The boys of today are to be the men of tomorrow, who will make our country. It is a very vital question as to how they are developing. Teachers, camp directors, etc., can give us many side lights on what the future of the country should be.

A well known man teacher, who has run a boy camp in a vacation resort for nearly 20 years, was asked recently how he thought the boys of to-day compare with those he came in contact with when "They are more easily led, and are more amenable to discipline," he said. "But they do not have as much initiative as they had then."

He attributed what he felt was their lack of initiative to the city life of today. The city boy is not thrown so much on his own resources as the country boy is. He thus is likely to have less originality. But this teacher seemed to feel that modern life is developing better behaved boys. They are learning that they can't get anywhere if they break away from school discipline. They have learned that to take a good standing in athletics, to get promoted in their classes, or to get a good job when they finish their education, they have to conform to the rules of the school and get their lessons.

This is a great gain. A great many boys and girls seem to come along rather well as long as they are under the discipline of their home town schools. But when they get out from under the discipline the modern spirit of independence seizes hold of them, and they often go to undesirable extremes. What they need are fine clubs and various organizations that shall direct their attitude as young folks to the best aims of citizenship and character.

Loud Talk

Someone recently put a bill into Congress, making it an offense punishable by a fine of not over $200, to speak in a loud and unusual tone in the District of Columbia.

The motive for introducing such a bill is not clear. Possibly it was intended humorously. Perhaps the petitioner was annoyed by the boisterous talk frequently heard from rough people on the streets, and thought some way should be found to curb it.

Unfortunately the hoodlums and rowdies are not the only ones who indulge in loud talk. Some orators think that their speeches give a greater impression of power if they shout at the tops of their voices. Some people in private conversation seem to think their words carry more weight if uttered in a loud voice. But it is noticeable that people who occupy positions of great authority are apt to talk rather quietly. They depend upon their force of character, their information, and their insight to support their authority, more than upon the wind behind their accents.

Reaching Out For Trade

Businessmen sometimes fail to realize that in these times when so many people have automobiles, they will travel a very considerable distance in order to reach what they consider an attractive and profitable trading center.

The merchants in any community need a systematic plan for reaching out into the outskirts of the trading territory of which they are the center, and if they are active and wide awake they can draw trade from nearer places which are less enterprising. Printers' ink is the medium with which the interest of the people in the outlying towns can be aroused. The Herald would be glad to make practical suggestions to any merchants who would like to extend their trade further out into the country.

Aerial Traffic Rules

It is easy to sympathize with young Bert Acosta, transatlantic flier, for his arrest in Connecticut; but the fact remains that the law under which he was arrested—a state law barring aviators from "stunting" or flying low over cities—is a good law.

Other states might do well to copy it. If a pilot brings his plane low over crowded city streets he is not only risking his own life but endangers the lives of everyone beneath him. If his engine stalls unexpectedly he has to come down in the street—and if you'll try to picture a speeding airplane landing in a crowded city street you'll realize that this would be a mighty serious matter.

Compel all flyers to stay at least 5000 feet in the air when passing over cities or towns. It won't be long before there will be so many planes in use that such a statute will be needed badly.

Mr. Fall's Story

Albert E. Fall is quoted in press dispatches as saying that the transaction whereby he received some $230,000 from Harry F. Sinclair was perfectly open and above board. He professes considerable indignation to think that anyone could suppose it anything else.

For all we may know he may be entirely right. Perhaps the money transacted was, after all, something altogether honorable.

But if so, it does seem a bit odd that it took a special act of Congress and four years of investigation to bring it to light.

A safety razor has been reported stolen from an Akron man. The chances are that the poor chap had just bought some new blades, too!

The RAMBLER By NORMAN W. RALSTON

THE NIGHT

THE NIGHT
Brings
Solace
To my soul
When I am half-way
To my goal,
The day brings sordid
Work and toil,
And my poor blood's
Inclined
To boil
When I fall short
My nightly dreams—
Reality
Is cruel, it seems—
In morning
I go forth to work
And what is there
That I would shirk,
At noon
I've cooled down
Quite a bit
And I'm not having Fun at it,
And so before
The day is Done,
And my set goal
Is half-way
Won,
I feel that I
Have lost
The Fight,
There's not a thing
I do
That's right—
And that is why
The night
Seems best
For man finds dreams
And also rest—

And what we mean to say
Is,
Go forth each day
To greet the morn
Forgetting
That
You are forlorn,
The day brings roses
From their sleep
And life goes forth
To fly or creep—
Each day is precious,
You will find,
If you will toil
And be
Half-kind.

The Epic of the Air "WE" By Charles A. Lindbergh

CHAPTER XXVI.

I expected to be able to locate my position approximately on the coast of Europe by the terrain. Ireland is somewhat mountainous; England rather hilly on the southern end; France is a lowland along the coast; Spain is mountainous. Therefore the coastline should indicate the country, and my accurate position could be obtained by the contours of that coastline and by the position of towns, rivers and railroads.

During the time of construction it was necessary to arrange for all equipment to be carried on the flight, including equipment for emergency use in a forced landing. After the first few hours there would be enough air in the fuel tanks to keep the ship afloat for some time. I also carried an air raft which could be inflated in several minutes and which could weather a fairly rough sea.

In addition to food for the actual flight, I carried five tins of army rations each of which contained one day's food and which could be made to last much longer if necessary. I carried two canteens of water; one containing a quart for use during the actual flight and the other containing a gallon for emergency.

In addition to this water, I had an Armbrust cup which is a device for condensing the moisture from human breath into drinking water. The cup is cloth covered and contains a series of baffle plates through which the breath is blown. The cup is immersed in water and then removed and blown through. The evaporation of the water on the outside cools the cup walls and the moisture collects and runs down to the bottom of the cup.

The following is a list of the equipment carried on the flight:

- 1 Flashlight.
- 1 Ball of string
- 1 Ball of cord.
- 1 Hunting knife.
- 1 Red flares sealed in rubber tubes.
- 1 Match safe with matches.
- 1 Large needle.
- 1 Canteen—4 qts.
- 1 Canteen—1 qt.
- 1 Armbrust cup.
- 1 Air raft, pump and repair kit.
- 5 Cans, Army emergency rations.
- 2 Air cushions.
- 1 Hack saw blade.

Near the end of April the factory work was completed and early one morning, the forty-six foot wing was taken out of the second floor of the factory onto the top of a waiting truck by means of a gasoline crane. A few days later the plane was completely assembled in its hangar, and on April 28, or sixty days after the order had been placed, I gave "The Spirit of St. Louis," her test flight.

The actual performance was above the theoretical. The plane was off the ground in six and one-half seconds, or in 165 feet, and was carrying over 400 pounds in extra gas tanks and equipment.

The maximum air speed meter reading was 128 M. P. H., and the climb excellent.

The load tests were made from the old Camp Kearny parade grounds near San Diego. At daybreak, one foggy morning, I took off from the field at Dutch Flats and headed for the Army's three kilometer speed course along Coronado Strand. The visibility became extremely bad over San Diego harbor and I was forced to land at Rockwell Field, North Island, and wait for the fog to lift before running the speed tests.

The sun soon dispelled the fog and I took the plane four times over the speed course at an average of 129 M. P. H. in a slight cross wind. I was carrying about twenty-five gallons of gasoline and over 400 pounds of extra tanks and equipment.

On the way to Camp Kearny I ran a number of tests on the relation of motor R. P. M. to air speed and by the time I reached the old parade-grounds' field I had collected quite a bit of valuable test data.

I decided to run one more test before landing and had it about half way completed when I allowed the data board to come too close to the window where a gust of air carried it out of the cockpit. I was flying over mesquite, over five miles from Camp Kearny at about a 1,200-foot altitude at the time, and could only spiral around and watch the board flutter down into the top of a mesquite bush.

"Murdered" Mail Clerk Shrieks When Doctors Prepare For Autopsy

DUBAPEST, Feb. 7.—(INS) The body of Thomas Hubes, a mail clerk who had been murdered in the mail car of a train in Transylvania, was laid out on the dissection table of the Kronstadt hospital and the physicians were just about to apply the knife for the post mortem when Thomas rose up with a yell.

His head showed twenty-five axe wounds but now the physicians believe that he will live.

After recovering from his fright Hubes named his assailant who had tried to murder him and robbed the mail.

The would-be murderer was arrested and when he saw his victim still alive confessed everything.

SYNOPSIS
Fabien, good and handsome youth of France, trains for the priesthood; but meets and loves Manon Lescaut, beautiful orphan, whose rascally brother, realizing her worldly value, barter her to Ravoire, rich connoisseur of women. Fabien saves her and carries her off to Paris. Manon's brother steals her for Ravoire. Circumstances force her to surrender to Ravoire. Fabien, thinking her perfidious, returns to his studies. But Manon seeks him, explains, and they go to Paris again, where they live in dreamlike splendor.

"Oh, Lord!" ejaculated Fabien. "You will have to pardon me, my dear. I will return when I do not have to share you with so many." Fabien hurried to Manon's side and kissed her finger tips gallantly. "Wait!" she commanded gaily. "Help me up first." Fabien lifted her to the side of the great bed. "Thank you—no, don't go yet—my slippers next!" She extended bare, pink little feet and as Fabien fitted on her satin slippers she bent over and kissed him provokingly on the forehead. Turning away with a laugh, before he could imprison her hands, she began struggling into a filmy negligee. Fabien came to the rescue and wrapped her lovely figure in its fragrant folds.

"Now, my lady, will you descend?" he inquired with mock dignity, offering his hand. Manon touched it gently with her finger tips and with exaggerated grace stepped from the dias to the floor—like a queen descending from her throne.

"Monsieur, there are two gentlemen in the drawing room."

"Darling, one kiss—Manon stood on tiptoes with pursed lips. "Yes—now you may go, but come back very soon!" She watched Fabien depart; then turning to the maid with a big happy sigh she said, "Marie, have them in."

They came. A troupe of morning callers who sat about and chatted while the hairdressers prepared Manon for the festivities of the day.

The Abbe Martineau was a quaint little figure. Manon's beauty had inspired him to write verse and the first thing he did was to perch himself on the arm of a big chair, at one end of her dressing table, and indulge in the pleasure of reading aloud while her coiffure was being arranged before his very eyes.

It was just intimate enough to please him immeasurably. Pauses in his reading were due not so much to emotion as to intervals in which he sipped wine and times when others intruded for a moment of Manon's time.

Manon was charming and attentive, with the result that the little man came every day and remained long enough to read a new couplet and imbibe a glass of wine.

The Abbe's presence, on this particular morning, annoyed Nana excessively. She did not have any perfume that compared with Manon's and the special bottle she wanted was on the corner of the dressing table where the Abbe interfered with her getting it. In the meantime she glowered at the little man and consoled herself by smelling the contents of every other bottle she could get her hands on. When she found a scent that she liked a generous portion was immediately transferred to her fingers and then brushed across her lips.

"Do you like that odor, Nana?" inquired Manon, who had been watching her with amusement.

"Yes, it is most seductive—what do you call it?"

"It's yours, if you want it," replied Manon generously.

"I couldn't think of it," protested Nana, but she had already decided to take the crystal and gold bottle as well as the rare perfume. "That is all right, Nana; Fabien will buy more—he gives me every thing I want."

"Yes, I have noticed—I don't see how you manage it," drawled Nana with mingled admiration and envy. "I have never owned as much jewelry as you have discarded."

Manon knew that Nana referred to the Comte De Ravoire's gifts, and it was annoying to have that episode of her life revived. Besides she hated to have anyone think that Fabien had not done a great deal more for her.

Opening a dressing table drawer, Manon took out a handsome velvet case and offered it for Nana's inspection. A priceless diamond pendant glittered handsomely from the rich velvet box.

"Isn't it a darling?" she inquired proudly.

"It is more beautiful than the Comte's ruby necklace." Nana's admiration was sincere. "Nana's admission was sincere."

"Fabien brought it to me last night." Manon lifted the jewel from the box and slipped the delicate chain over her head.

The hairdressers had just completed their pleasant duty and Manon's callers gathered about to inspect her new gift.

She made a lovely picture, sitting there before her mirror, so happy in her love, with her lover's latest extravagant gift sparkling from its nesting place on her breast.

Unknown to everyone, Fabien was the most absorbed spectator of the little scene. Since leaving Manon's boudoir he had wandered about the great house trying to settle upon some way to handle the pressing need for money. His father had disowned him. Tiberge was still friendly and compassionate, but his means were limited, and even if he gave up all he had it would not be sufficient to meet their extravagant mode of living. It did not occur to Fabien to live simply, because Manon's nature demanded luxuries and amusement and he felt that he should be man enough to provide them for her. Also, he loved her in the gay happy moods that were hers in the midst of their present surroundings and some way, some how, he was determined to provide all that her pleasure loving nature craved.

Fabien had not settled on any definite financial plan when he recalled Manon's request to "come back very soon." He returned to her boudoir and chanced to arrive at the open door just as she was showing her necklace. Fabien remained outside, a look of comic dismay on his weathered face.

A few days before Manon had described the jewel to him with such enthusiasm that he could not resist surprising her with it as a gift. No one knew better than how ill he could afford the indulgence. But when he saw what a beautiful picture she made in its reflected glory, he did not regret the extravagance. The incident only drove home the fact that he must raise money—a quantity of money—before many more days passed into eternity and carried him along in a hopeless maze of bills and insistent bailiffs.

Fabien did not join the admiring throng gathered about Manon. He was about to enter when a servant quietly approached and said: "Monsieur, there are two gentlemen—in the drawing room who insist upon seeing Monsieur."

Fabien tried to put Manon out of his thoughts as he went downstairs to confront the two gentlemen. He knew only too well who they were and what they wanted. Their presence in his home was not welcome and he dreaded the consequences of the enforced interview.

CHAPTER XVI

When Fabien entered the drawing room he felt two pairs of piercing eyes centered upon him.

The humiliation and annoyance that had been his before entering the door changed to an air of amused nonchalance. The situation did have an amusing side. Why not play up to it and ignore the danger involved? At least it would be a new and refreshing way to receive the callers.

"Good afternoon, gentlemen," Fabien bowed politely as though they were distinguished guests. "I had not expected to have the pleasure of receiving you again so soon."

The two men plainly showed their surprise at this unexpected greeting and as a result the things they had intended saying came out in unintelligible sputters. One of them began searching his pockets for a paper that it was his duty to serve. Fabien saw the gesture and with an amused twinkle and deliberate misconception said:

"Won't you try some of mine?" offering his snuff box. "Perhaps you left yours at home."

"We didn't come here to take snuff with you—and you know it!" shouted the angry bailiff, at last finding his tongue.

Schaghticoke's Name Befuddles Postman

SCHAGHTICOKE, N. Y., Feb. 7 (UP)—The Indians who once roamed the country that is now Schaghticoke innocently bestowed upon the peaceful village a heritage in the form of a name that has inflicted an enigma on the rest of the country.

To the unfamiliar person, Schaghticoke takes first prize among the communities with hard names including Punxsutawney, Pa., and Skaneateles.

On papers sent to offices in this village during the last year, the name of the community was spelled 19 different ways. For illustration: Schaghook, Scaticook, Scadocoke, Scaticoke, Scaticook, Scaterocoke, Cchatoocook, Schocoke, Scadocook, Schioke, Scaticope, Schaticoke, Scghticoke, Schaghticoke, Schaghtioke, Schoghtioke, Schaticoke and Schaticook.

MISS ALLISON DELAPLAINE, SOCIETY EDITOR.

Plan State Contest

The Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs is conducting a campaign for More Adequately Equipped Homes. The Federation is conducting an essay contest among students from the seventh to the twelfth grades, inclusive. The themes adjudged the best will win prizes consisting of cash rewards for 32 students and trips to Washington for eight students and their mothers, all expenses paid.

Instead of giving the trips to the writers of the eight best essays in the state, as at first announced, it has been decided to give them to the best in each district, of which there will be eight, Pickaway county being in the South-East District.

Themes will be judged 80 per cent on thought and 20 per cent on English and neatness.

The contest closes Feb. 22. District winners will be announced March 13. Winners of trip and their mothers start to Washington on March 25, and return on March 30.

To Honor Glee Club

A Valentine Luncheon, honoring the Republican Women's Glee Club, will be given on Tuesday, Feb. 14, in the ball room of the Neil House in Columbus. Mrs. E. F. Anderson, of Circleville, is taking reservations for this affair, and persons wishing to attend, should call her immediately.

In School Chapel

The students of Circleville high school met in the auditorium Monday morning for chapel exercises, which were opened by singing "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," followed by other selections sung by the entire student body.

Principal R. F. Cain, then introduced Dr. Franklin McElfresh of the Methodist church, who spoke with great feeling and a wide knowledge of two great Americans, whose birthdays come in February—Lincoln and Washington. He offered as a motto on which to establish one's life, "Clean Hands and a Pure Heart." Everyone enjoyed his interesting and straightforward talk.

Mr. Cain then spoke for a few moments, of a cross examination about the presidents. It was found that out of the number of students present, 25 had birthdays in February.

The theme of Mr. Cain's talk was "Should I obey my father and my mother?" In an interesting manner, he showed the students that they should, and received their hearty applause.

Plans are being made for other Monday morning chapel services to be held in the auditorium.

To Give Lecture

Through the courtesy of the Rainbow Tours of Columbus, there will be an illustrated lecture at the High School Auditorium, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. M. L. F. Martindale, who is chief ranger in Yellowstone National park, will speak on "Bird and Animal Life in Yellowstone Park." This interesting lecture will be illustrated by motion pictures and beautiful colored slides. The admission is free and will be a pleasant evening for those who have been travelers in the Park or who are contemplating such a trip.

At Board Meeting

Mrs. E. F. Anderson, of East Main street, went to Columbus Tuesday, where she attended a meeting of the Board of Governors of the Council of Republican Women, which was called by the chairman, Mrs. Le Van. The meeting was held at the Deshler hotel.

Invitations Issued

Mr. and Mrs. James I. Smith have issued invitations to a dinner party at 6:30 o'clock on Thursday, at their home on South Court street.

Monday Club Meets

The division of the Monday club study, for Monday evening, was "Literature," of which Mrs. Carl Ritz is chairman. Under the head, "Religion in Fiction," Miss Grace Moodie read a paper on "Religion in American Fiction of the Nineties," quoting Dickens. Miss Moodie said, "It was the worst of times; it was the best of times."

The world still held to its moorings of the life, devoted to Christ. Every book or story must have its moral. "In His Steps," by Dr. Sheldon; "Singular Life," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; "Song of Issachar," by E. S. Brooks; "Song of Prophecy," by George Anson Jackson; "Maggie" by Stephan Crane, and "The Choir Invisible," by James Lane Allen, mirror this time.

Miss Sadie Brunner in a paper on "Religion in Contemporary Fiction," considered H. G. Wells, Compton, McKenzie, Sheila Kaye-Smith, May Sinclair, Archibald Marshall, G. K. Chesterton, Ethel Mannin, A. S. M. Hutchinson, and John Oxenham.

"There are more English than American religious writers," said Miss Brunner, "because there are more deep thinkers and more writers in England, who have sprung from an atmosphere of literature, than in our country."

"Religion in American Literature," was given by Mrs. William Ulm. "Never was religion more discussed in books; but alas! it is pagan. The profound, noble, decorum of the past, is lost in a frank profanity," was the speaker's verdict of to-day's literature.

However, Fosdick, Stanley Jones, George Stewart, and Bruce Barton were named as worth while writers.

Under Current Events, by Mrs. Emil Toensmeier, The Lausanne Conference of Churches, The Federation of Churches meeting in Columbus, in January, The Atheistic Fight on the Gideons, and the Controversy, over the Change in the English Prayer Book, were the topics chosen.

And, as proof, that all is well, the gist of an article, "Is Science a Blind Alley," that appears in the February Harper's, was quoted. It is: "Science can never take the place of religion, in that it can only tell us HOW. The thinking world demands to know WHY." And this was written by a scientist.

Surprised by Party

Miss Mary Kibler was surprised Monday evening when 15 of her friends gathered at her home on East Mound street. They spent a pleasant evening in playing games and in guessing contests. Those present were: Mrs. Viola Spangler, Mrs. Fannie Moats, Mrs. Goldie Leist, Mrs. Ruby Hudnell, Miss Alma Glick, Miss May Hudnell, Miss Ina Klingensmith, Miss Sidney Trimble, Miss Helen Wilson, Miss Verda Eymann, Miss Catherine Eymann, Miss Annette Carothers, Miss Alice Kibler, Miss Gladys Noggle and Miss Goldia Noggle.

Aid Society to Meet

The Ladies Aid Society of the Lutheran church will meet Wednesday afternoon in the social rooms of the church. This will be the regular monthly meeting which was postponed from last week because of the United States band concert. The February committee, of which Mrs. I. N. Abernethy is chairman, will provide the entertainment and serve refreshments.

At Heffner Home.

Mrs. Harvey Heffner and Miss Mary Heffner have asked 24 friends to a bridge party Friday afternoon at two o'clock at their home on East Mound street.

For Son's Birthday.

The party which Mrs. Lloyd Jones had Monday afternoon for her little son, Lloyd, was in celebration of his fourth birthday. There were 17 of his friends present, who spend a merry afternoon with favors of false noses and spectacles and balloons, and in throwing confetti and playing games. The guests were Peggy Goeller, Virginia Hulise, Martha Hulise, Mary Fickardt, Mary Jane Connelly, Mary Virginia Crites, Mary Carolyn Goeller, Polly Anna Friedman, Margaret Boggs, William Bennett Heffner, Dick Beechy, Bobby Kline, Frank Davis, David Orr, Howard Orr, David Yates, Charles Groce Will, John Goeller, and Hildeburn Jones. Mrs. Howard Jones and Miss Eleanor Jones assisted the hostess.

Guest Wins Prize.

When Mrs. George H. Fickardt entertained the eight members of her bridge club Monday evening, Mrs. Felix Caldwell, an additional guest, carried off the honors and was given the prize for high score.

Entertained at Dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Enderlin entertained Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Friend, of Chillicothe, to dinner at 6 o'clock Monday evening at their home on South Court street, honoring Mrs. Friend's birthday anniversary.

Miss Beulah Liston spent Saturday and Sunday in Mt. Sterling.

Hungary Watches Case Of 'Hereditary Patricide' For Three Generations

BUDAPEST, Feb. 7.—(INS)—A case of hereditary patricide unique in criminal annals is recorded from the District of Isaszeg where the nineteen year old Johann Skebek killed his forty-year old father with an axe. The father was a man who when he was nineteen had also stabbed to death his father who likewise was the murderer of his father.

Grandfather, father and son were patricides. But the son, Johanna is not likely to carry on the tradition. Present day criminal justice in Hungary promises to send him to the penitentiary for life, safe from the fate which his own baby son may have been preparing for him out of family habit.

TUNNEY BELIEVES DEMPSEY HAS QUIT RING GAME

GENE ASSERTS JACK REFUSED "HUGE PURSE"

Champion Says He Signed For Only One Bout—Depressed Over Income Tax.

By LES CONKLIN

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—Gene Tunney wants to defend his title twice this year but he may fight only once because he thinks that Jack Dempsey is through and will not be available for a bout this fall. The heavyweight champion, outlining his ring plans today, said he was convinced that Dempsey has quit the squared circle for all time. "Right now I am signed for only one bout this year," said Gene. "It will be in June, against the winner of the elimination tournament between Sharkey, Risko, Delaney and Heeney."

"I want two bouts, but it may be that no outstanding opponent will be available for a second match."

Figures Income Tax

Tunney is back in his home town for a ten-day visit. The champion was visibly depressed. Far from that dear Miami shore, with its golf and swimming, he must go into a huddle with the income tax collector concerning his tax return for 1927. Since he earned a cool million in the Dempsey bout at Chicago alone last year, the Tunney bankroll is due to absorb considerable punishment.

Gene revealed that promoter Tex Rickard offered Dempsey "a huge purse" for a title bout next September.

"When Jack turned down that offer, I knew he was through," continued the champ. "I believe that his eyes are troubling him and that he will not risk a further injury to them. Once I had eye trouble for months, myself."

After a learned discussion of muscular ailments in the optic regions, Tunney declared that he is now in perfect condition. He said he weighs only 193 pounds. Against Dempsey in Chicago he weighed 189 1-2.

Favors Sharkey

The champion declared he had no intention of defending his title in Chicago under the promotion of Jim Mullen.

Gene expressed the opinion that the list of challengers for his crown was limited to Sharkey, Heeney, Delaney and Risko.

"Paulino has been beaten three times in New York," he said. "George Godfrey's knockouts against set-ups mean nothing. He has lost many decisions in many towns."

Tunney emphasized that he is in perfect agreement with the plans of Tex Rickard.

"When you fight for Rickard you are sure of getting your money," he concluded.

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY

The second annual Olympic winter sports will start this week at St. Moritz, Switzerland.

The United States is represented by a strong team, including speed-skaters, ski-men, figure skaters and bob-sleighters.

A victory in a majority of the events on the winter program would start this country off on the right track towards another triumph in another Olympiad, but those familiar with conditions under which the sports of St. Moritz are to be conducted predict strong competition from the French and Germans.

Germany is making a particularly strong bid for Olympic honors this year, and would have no objection to starting in right away with a victory in the winter games.

These games, of course, do not compare in importance with those at Amsterdam next July, but there is no harm in winning them, if one has a mind to do so.

Germany and France have entered the strongest teams. Strangely enough, Japan is to be represented in the winter sports. There is a Japanese team in the 50 kilometre ski race, the 18-kilometre ski race, the ski-jumping and the combination race.

American men and women are entered in 11 events, as follows: speed skating, figure skating for men, and for women, couple skating, ski-running and jumping, two ski races and one event for jumpers, what is known as a skeleton race, the ice hockey matches and bob-sleighting.

Twenty-four nations, a record number, are taking part in this week's program at St. Moritz.

As for the Olympic games at Amsterdam, which will come later in the year, no little dissatisfaction is being expressed in connection with the water sports.

European rowing authorities are squawking about the facilities for the crews which will compete at Amsterdam.

The strip of water selected for the Olympic races is exceedingly narrow.

Only two boats can row abreast on the course chosen by the Netherlands Olympic Committee.

Since between 30 and 40 crews will compete, each of the survivors must row four races in five days.

With plans completed for sending to Amsterdam a capable team of American boxers, it is interesting to note that Great Britain also will be represented in boxing at the 1928 Olympic Games.

A special meeting of the Amateur Boxing Association of Great Britain recently passed a resolution to send a team of boxers to the 9th Olympiad. This over-ruled a previous decision.

The British will be represented in the rowing events at Amsterdam, also, although the British Amateur Rowing Association has voted not to send crews.

The National Amateur Rowing Association, which has almost as much to say where water sports are concerned, has decided to send a crew to the Olympics.

FINE MATCHES IN WRESTLING SHOW AT GYM

Small Crowd Witnesses Fast and Furious Grappling—Champ Held to Draw

A very small crowd witnessed the wrestling show at the C. A. C. Monday night. The few people who attended however, saw one of the best bills ever presented in Circleville.

In the opener Dan Copen threw Ted Lathrop with a reverse armlock and body scissors after 10 minutes of fast and furious wrestling.

Joe Snyder, of Lancaster, lost to Ray Phillips, of Shepherd, O., in the second match, with a body scissors and armlock in the last five seconds of the match. This was a thriller all the way, and the two were even up until the fall was scored.

In the semi-final, Jack Landers, state lightweight champion had his hands full with Merle Dolby, formerly of Ashville. Landers won the first fall with a leg split in 16 minutes. Dolby came back to win the second fall with an arm stretch in 14 minutes, and they wrestled the duration of the match to a draw. This was a very interesting match and the draw was a popular decision.

The last bout was the most sensational of the evening. Carl Bugh-tler, of Marysville, tangled with Thomas Teeters, of Bluefield, W. Va. Teeters took the first fall with a cradle hold in seven minutes flat, but Bugh-tler scored the next with a hammerlock in quick time. The next and deciding fall was a whirlwind affair with first one and then the other being thrown out of the ring. Several times the referee was mistaken for a wrestler and he was on the floor most of the time. Bugh-tler, who by the way, is about the roughest person imaginable, won the last fall in 8 minutes, after he had been thrown out of the ring by Teeters.

Due to the poor attendance, quite a bit of money was lost on the show, but the people who saw the matches went away satisfied. It is the policy of the C. A. C. to sponsor athletic events which the public cares for, but they can not do so, without the patronage which they deserve.

ATLANTA AND JACKSON SPLIT FLOOR GAMES

Township Boys Take Short End of 32 to 15 Score—Player Is Injured.

Jackson girls were again victorious, Friday night when they took Atlanta's measure, 14-8. The game was well played throughout. Atlanta showed that they were game losers, for they played hard until the final whistle. They were inferior to Jackson in most respects, but excelled in shooting fouls.

Ours and M. Finley monopolized the scoring for Jackson, scoring six and eight points respectively. Southward and Wolford played well at guard, while Farmer and Kirk played best for Atlanta.

The Jackson girls have shown a remarkable improvement, due to the efficient coaching of Mr. Lampl.

The Jackson boys did not fare so well, taking the short end of a 32-15 count. The game was marred by unintentional injuries to both teams. Price suffered a fracture of the nose while cranking an automobile before the game, and will probably be lost to the team for the remainder of the season.

Jackson lost out when they were unable to stop Turner, Kirk and Evans who proceeded to pile up a commanding lead that was never challenged.

The note was signed I. G. R.

The king was greatly touched by this mark of sympathy and immediately asked to be informed of their names in order that he might thank them personally.

What is HOME without a GARDEN

Where do we get the new plants that are offered by dealers each year? How is the interminable procession of novelties kept up?

The making of new plants is one of the most fascinating developments of modern science for it is scientific plant breeding that we owe most of them. Formerly the chief source of supply rested in plant explorers securing remote countries of the world and sending back new species of plant life that they discovered. As the surface of the earth becomes more carefully explored, this source for new garden material diminishes. Of late years the interior of China and Thibet have yielded the greatest quantities of new plants. Of the plants listed in commercial catalogues, the primroses have, perhaps, shown the greatest number of additions. Specialists list a hundred or so species and varieties, a large portion of them brought into cultivation within the last 20 years.

New varieties occasionally appear in plantations so distinct as to warrant being regarded as distinct species. These are known as mutants, a term applied by the Belgian scientist, Prof. Hugo DeVries, who devised the famous mutations theory to account for the appearance of new species of plants. There are continual slight variations in plants and by cultivating these slight variations through several generations new types are often secured. The Shirley poppy owed its origin to a common red poppy showing a faint line of white on the petal. Seed of this poppy was saved and sown through several generations saving only those which showed increasing white until now we have this race of pale-colored poppies. This process is known as selection.

Professor DeVries declared that mutants were the result of discontinuous vibrations, the change coming at once and inexplicably. Some of our best new varieties originate in this way, the dahlia-flowered zinnia being an example, according to some experts. The zinnia with curled petals appeared alone among a bed of thousands and was segregated and found to breed true.

The discovery of Mendel's law of heredity in 1865, which was not developed and put into practical application until some years later, has placed plant breeding on a scientific basis so that a breeder may estimate with reasonable certainty the result of crosses that he makes knowing from Mendel's law the proportion of plants he will get from a cross which will resemble each parent and those which will show a mingling of the characteristics of both parents.

When a desirable cross has been secured the next step is to "true it up"—that is, to breed it until all or most of its seedlings repeat the desired qualities. This is called line breeding. Selection is a part of this process, that is, taking only seedlings of the best form and color or possessing the characteristics for which the breeder seeks, and destroying all others. This work takes a number of years, in many cases, but when the work is completed we have a new race of plants for our gardens.

Only plants closely related will cross successfully. When they are remotely related they are known as wide crosses and seedlings are likely to produce monstrous forms or, if desirable, to prove sterile, that is, unable to form or produce seed. Breeding progress, therefore stops. Such plants are known as "mules" from their similarity to the domestic animal, which cannot reproduce itself by mating with its kind. This is common among the pinks, the old Dianthus Napoleon III being a mule pink. It can be propagated only by cuttings.

But by far the greatest number of new varieties of our new plants and new strains of plants are the result of scientific hybridization.

FERN LIKES SHADE, NOT DARK CORNERS

Gloom Is Unsuitable to Plant—Old Fashioned Boston Variety Is Best.

Because a fern is able to grow in the shade, is no alibi for sticking it away in a dark corner of a room and expecting it to grow as well as it would in a window with some sunlight, it is pointed out by Victor H. Ries, extension floriculturist of the Ohio State University. But that ability of the fern to get on with less sunlight than some other plants need, adapts it for use as a house plant.

Best of all the varieties, in Ries' opinion, is the old fashioned Boston Fern with its long, graceful fronds. But it is often too large for the average house, where the dwarf Boston or "Teddy Junior" will suit. These are all the simpler leaved Boston ferns. There are many, however, which have the finely and delicately divided leaves, such as Whitman's fern," says Ries. "They are not, as a rule, as satisfactory as the Boston ferns."

"All ferns prefer a sandy, coarse, well-drained soil, so we can make up an excellent fern soil by mixing leaf mold and a light, sandy loam. To this, for fertilizer, we may add a little well-rotted manure or a small amount of bone meal. Drainage may be secured by putting in an abundant quality of broken pot in the bottom of each pot."

SHE PUTS IT OVER ON HOLLYWOOD

Jeanne Williams, winner of a Syracuse, N. Y., beauty contest and later a member of Ziegfeld's "Follies," went to Hollywood to carve out a movie career. The P. T. A. will meet in the school auditorium, Wednesday night of next week.

John Vaughn, Sr., was called to Muncie, Ind., by the sickness and death of his mother. Her death occurred at her home, Saturday morning.

Veni, Vidi, Vinci — They came, they saw, they conquered. That is just what Atlanta Hi basket ball team did at Jackson Township school last Friday night. When Coach Miller's team went on the floor they thought possibly their task was not an easy one, but they proceeded to take care of their opponents with much ease. It's no use to query on what might have been because what really was, pleased the large delegation from A. H. S. when the last whistle sounded and the score stood 22 to 15. The Atlanta girls put up a strong fight, but went down in defeat to the Jackson girls' team.

OHIO FARMS DIDN'T SHARE IN FORTUNE

National Agricultural Prosperity Worked Other Way For State Grain Growers.

National agricultural prosperity in 1927 seems a myth to the Ohio farmer because it doesn't apply to him with anything like the force with which it applies to farmers in other states, it is pointed out by V. R. Wertz of the staff of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, now attached to the rural economics department of the Ohio State University.

Low production of grains in Ohio was largely responsible for Ohio's gross income to agriculture falling behind that of agriculture generally, Wertz says. The gross income of Ohio farmers fell behind that of 1926, while the income of farmers in other states are rising.

While corn production in the United States rose to 3 1/2 per cent above its 1926 level, the 1927 Ohio crop fell below that of 1926. Likewise the United States wheat crop of 1927 was 5 per cent above that of 1926, whereas the Ohio wheat crop was 23 per cent less. The oat crop of the United States was only 4 per cent under that of last year, but the Ohio crop fell 19 per cent below the 1926 yield.

"This is a case," says Wertz, "in which the cause for a strengthened agricultural situation in the country at large, and more especially in the central western states, has worked to the detriment of Ohio, for while an increased production in the country as a whole lowered the price per bushel which Ohio farmers received for their grain, lower production in Ohio gave them less to sell."

CHICAGO, Feb. 7 — (INS) — Jeanne Eagles, noted actress, today refused to confirm or deny reports that she is preparing a divorce action against her husband Ted Coy, former Yale football star.

Later, associates of Miss Eagles announced that it is the plan of the actress to seek a divorce in Chambers during the latter part of this week. Mr. Coy, it is said, will not contest.

French Foreign Legion Has Fascination For Germany's Young Men

BERLIN, Feb. 7 — (INS) — Despite all warnings and stories of hard life in the French foreign legion, this famous fighting organization continues to exercise an irresistible fascination for Germany's young men.

The number of Germans trying to enlist in the legion has become so big that the border recruiting stations have had to raise the physical standard to reduce the number of enlistments, according to reports in the German press.

More than 100 young German enlistees within a few days in Metz alone. Fifty-seven were rejected.

Among those enlisting were German students and other members of the so-called academic classes.

This Thing of Building Desires

The function of the retail store has extended beyond the business of supplying a market. It must also create one—if it is to tap the pipeline of greater possibilities.

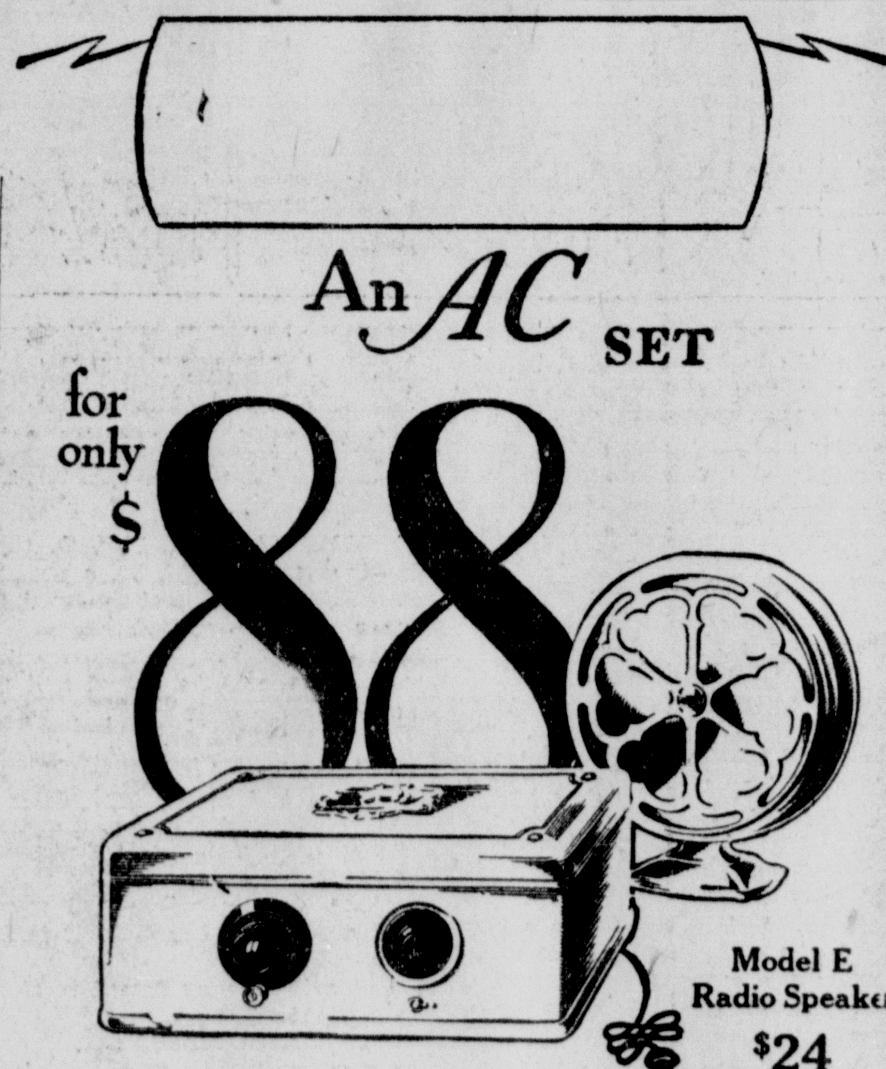

Too often advertising is based on assumption that the public already desires the goods—that its wants have been developed.

Only about 25 percent of the electric wired homes have electric toasters, an item that can be bought for a small sum. About 37 percent have vacuum cleaners, a little over 25 per cent have clothes washers; and less than 2 per cent have ironing machines.

Electrical appliances may be an exception. Yet it is reasonable to suppose that there are vast numbers who do not buy new rugs, new furniture, more clothes and personal items simply because they have not been educated to want these things.

Retailing cannot afford to assume that the "want" is there.

Retail advertising at all times must be alert to the necessity of creating desires.

Hamburg's Lucky Streak

Hamburg, one of Germany's largest cities, might be still only a small port if the American colonies had not rebelled against English rule and won the Revolutionary war. A large part of the trade of the continent of Europe that formerly went through London was diverted to Hamburg as the result of that conflict, and the city grew by leaps and bounds, relates Pathfinder Magazine. Now it and its suburbs have about 2,250,000 population. Bremen and Stettin also had a remarkable growth during the German expansion period, but Hamburg had the advantage over these ports by having deep water.

Nitroglycerin a Medicine

Nitroglycerin, commonly considered one of the most dangerous explosives, is used to save the lives of persons afflicted with high blood pressure. In small quantities it serves to enlarge the blood vessels, lowering the blood pressure.

New Electric Cord

A new kind of electric cord, invented by a Hungarian, does away with the electric push-button. This cord can be squeezed or pinched at any point along its length and it will make contact and ring the bell or operate the signal.

Cat-Tails Not Popular

Cat-tails have a disagreeable odor that is not easily removed and for that reason they are not satisfactory when used for upholstering and making mattresses. Cat-tails are not used commercially in this country. In England they were used for upholstering prior to the time that kapok was introduced from Java.

English Round Church

St. Semulchre, a church in Cambridge, England, is commonly called the Round church. It is a Norman building dating from 1101. It is the oldest of the four circular churches surviving in England.
